Wise Owner Teaches His Dog To Eat Only From Own Dish

Proper Training Saves Much Unpleasantness; How to Go About It Described

It's not easy to teach your dog to take no food save from his own dish, but no part of his training will yield greater dividends, states the Gaines Dog Research Center, New York City.

For one thing, says the Center, it will save you much trouble resulting from the dog's "picking things up" in his wanderings around town or country. Most dogs are inclined to take "into" their mouths or even swallow anything they come upon that appeals to their sense of smell. There is little doubt that the germs of many illnesses, as well as a wide variety of worms, are thus introduced into the dog's system. Some dogs get into the habit of swallowing large solid objects which accumulate in the intestinal tract and must be removed by elaborate, expensive surgery later.

Teaching the dog to eat only from his own dish pays off in other ways, too. It eliminates "begging" at the table, which can be extremely embarrassing when you have company, and it makes for more friendly community relations by doing away with possible visits by Rover to neighborhood garbage cans. Most important of all, his refusal to take food from strangers may save his life when dog poisoners are at work, as they are at some time or other in many communities.

Here is an effective method of teaching this particular food lesson to your dog. After he has eaten his meal, take him outside, and place a tempting tidbit in front of him. If he moves to take it, command "No" sharply. If this does not stop him, slap him on the shoulders or hindquarters with a rolled-up newspaper or magazine, at the same time keeping up the command "No." Later, arrange with a stranger to make the offer of tempting food. Continue the punishment until he has learned the lesson. Then take him, perhaps, for a walk through an alley where pieces of meat have been dropped. If he still moves to take the meat, or garbage or refuse, again command "No" and move as if to punish him. Before long he will realize what it is you are after.
Training your dog to refuse food from strangers or to eat anywhere but out of his own special dish will come easier, of course, if he is kept regularly on a good food. A good food is described by the Center as one which is a complete meal and provides a balanced diet—body-building proteins, foods and fat for energy and protective vitamins and minerals. To keep a dog in best condition, his food should contain meat meal, cereals, milk nutrients, vegetables, minerals, and vitamins A, B, B₂, B₆, D and E, niacin and panthothenate. The more of these elements a dog food contains in scientifically determined proportions, the better a dog food it is likely to be, it states.

Curs—But No Mongrels—Popular Early U. S. Dogs

It is incorrect to use the term "cur" when referring to a mongrel, says the Gaines Dog Research Center, New York City. The fact is that the cur was a definite breed of dog, now extinct, but very common in the southern and western parts of the United States until long after the Civil War. Curs were all-around dogs particularly adapted to the needs of the early settlers, weighed from 50 to 60 pounds, were usually brindle or yellow in color, with broad skulls, deep chests, short, strong backs and coarse but smooth coats.

According to Judy's "Dog Encyclopedia," England also had a dog which was known as cur. When dogs were first taxed in England in 1796, specific exemption was provided for sheepdogs, which the law described as "tailless dogs." As a result, many dogs had their breed changed quickly through the process of bobtailing. (Perhaps this is where the confusion of cur with mongrel began.) To curtail originally meant to shorten the tail, but in time the word came to be applied to any act of shortening or being curt.
