

Farm Forester

FARM TIMBER-MARKETING:

Few farmers have had experience in harvesting their timber systematically or in measuring standing trees or logs to determine the volume or value. Many lack experience in negotiating timber sales and making contracts or in finding markets for numerous forest products except through the local sawmill. Therefore, an urgent need exists for public assistance to farmers and other owners of small woodland acreages and to wood-using industry in developing a systematic program of harvesting and marketing farm timber which will provide a continuous yield of high-quality forest products and a permanent forest industry. Under this project the work of a farm forester is:

1. To promote a systematic harvesting and marketing of farm timber to supply the timber needs for the postwar period.

2. To assist farmers and other owners of small timber acreages in selecting, marketing, and measuring timber of market size and quality in a manner to determine the volume, provide a systematic harvest, and maintain the forest stock in a productive condition.

3. To assist these timber owners in finding markets, making sales, providing sample marketing contracts, etc., for various timber products. 4. To assist in developing a sound working relationship between timber owners and sawmill operators, pulpwood contractors, and other harvesters and purchasers of timber.
