

Farmers Get A Break In Wildlife Bill In North Carolina

Raleigh, Feb. 5.—Farmers, the men who know wild life, get a break in the bill before the legislature to set up a separate Wildlife Resources Commission.

The measure specified that the Commissioners must be hunters, fishermen, biologists, or farmers. It would be a commission of nine, appointed by the Governor from geographical districts. Every section of the State would be represented.

The House Conservation and Development Committee hearing will be held Tuesday of next week. Hunters and fishermen in all brackets, who were here last week at the meeting of the N. C. Wildlife Federation, will return to be heard at that meeting.

Many farmers will be included.

They can tell the committee a lot about game and fish conditions, about the astounding irregularities and inconsistencies, about the woeful lack of conservation game measures in the present setup, with game and fish under the Conservation Department, about the scarcity of game, about the neglect of these bountiful natural resources of North Carolina.

Two years ago, a somewhat similar bill came before the legislature. However, there was lack of organization in a battle against a strongly organized opposition. This time, backed by the powerful Federation, there is plenty of organization.

North Carolina's greatest experts on wildlife conditions are convinced that the bill's passage is the only salvation to the new and fuller life in field and stream.

PHOTOGRAPHED AT A BAR AGAIN — Earl Wilson, well-known Broadway columnist and self-styled saloon editor, has been photographed at just about every bar in town at one time or another. However, this was his first experience in being photographed at a bar with his slippers on. Of course it is a dog bar run by his son "Sluggo" for the family pet.

Southern Farm Market Summary

Freezing weather extended into the Florida vegetable-producing sections last week and prices on a number of items became firm to higher, both at shipping points and terminal markets. Early indications on citrus damage, however, did not point to severe loss.

Cold weather, too, affected livestock marketing throughout the country. Hog unloads were fairly heavy before the cold wave. Total hogs marketed amounted to about 16,000 as compared with 23,000 last week. Prices were stimulated by the

More Meat

Only a handful of cattle and calves arrived at some markets, and supplies at some plants were cut in half. Prices ranged from steady to a dollar higher.

Cotton prices advanced during the week about a cent a pound, and average for Middling 15-16 inch was well over 31 1-2 cents.

Live poultry buying was liberal in the north Georgia area. Fryer prices were around 21-25 cents. In Raleigh, the range was steady at 24 to 26 cents. Heavy breed fowl were firm.

The decline in exports and Army requirements will increase the supply of all meat for domestic use and the per capita consumption of meat during 1947 will be much higher than last year. Prices are not likely to decline to any great extent from present levels unless there is a general breakdown in wages and a very considerable decline in other commodity prices, is the announcement from State Department of Agriculture.
