On Being Vigilant
 That the price we pay for liberty is eternal vigilance may seem like old stuff to some of us. We are prone to relax after being vigilant for five years during a hard war. Like the next man, we pay more attention to signs of optimism than to those danger signals that are likely to call us to vigilance.

As modern-day Americans, we incline by our actions and our interests that we are concerned about a lot of things—but perhaps least concerned about playing Paul Revere's role. Let Samuel Adams and John Hancock and Thomas Jefferson and Patrick Henry and A. Lincoln and all the others stay in their history books. We won our freedom in 1776, and we've kept it since. So why take the trouble to worry about being vigilant in 1947?

Take the Trouble
 During the war we were told what to be vigilant against, and much of what we were fighting for. Even particular freedoms were enumerated. We knew too, which particular dictators were giving us trouble. But today Hitler is gone. Mussolini's ambitions are dust. It was a lot of trouble, but we paused to finish the job. We were strong enough to do it, and we are still strong.

It is always a lot of trouble to have a mind toward our freedoms. With three-fourths of the world embracing doctrines which oppose our cherished freedoms, and with many of the nations of the world scorning our kind of Republic, we shall have to keep on taking trouble to defend our way of life. This is true, even when we know that our Republic is the best and most prosperous anywhere in the history of civilization.

Defense of the Mind
 We have called America the melting pot, the place where the cradle of liberty was first rocked, the refuge of all the persecuted of hundreds of brands of minorities. We have been a thrifty people, an active people, a people building a continent—all the while warding off tyrants from abroad and having a care of home for your freedoms and mine.

How is it, then, that we have been caught napping? Have we not, in times of confusion at home and abroad, allowed doctrines to creep in which would chain our minds and shackles our bodies as well? Distorting, misleading, boring from within, state socialism at home and abroad presents to us the kind of cure that tyranny has always been to free men. Inroads have been made on some sectors of the American mind.

Constructive Program
 Did you know that polls have shown that 81 per cent of our people do not know what a balanced budget is? That virtually a third have no conception of the meaning of "free enterprise"? That many of us think it is right to owe a huge national debt to ourselves? That security is something Congress can hand out that inflation is acceptable because it creates wealth? That there are ways to earn more by doing less?

All these things are fallacies. With other fallacies they will ensue, just as surely as any tyrant. We must retain our platform freedom. Can there be a more constructive program than that of free mind?

Fertilizer Supply Of Demand

Although the supply of mixed fertilizers available to farmers in North Carolina will be almost as large this year as last, the supply may be less than the demand, due to bottlenecks in the supply of ingredients and an insufficiency of box cars for hauling the phosphate rock to the plants and a shortage of tank cars used for transporting sulphuric acid, which is used to treat phosphate rock in producing superphosphate, according to D. S. Coltrane, Assistant Commissioner of Agriculture.

Serious Disease Attacking Cattle

Agriculture Commissioner W. Kerr Scott, has issued an urgent warning to North Carolina farmers to be on the alert for signs of foot-and-mouth disease in their cattle. Declaring that many of the largest producers of cattle in Mexico face bankruptcy because of the prevalence of this disease, Scott said that it is being brought into this country by "cattle bootleggers". The U. S. Government has halted all imports of cattle from Mexico, according to Scott, "but some are slipping through anyway."
