

MILLIONS SPENT FOR DOG FOOD RESEARCH

Use of Prepared Products Boosts Dog Ownership, Says Expert

Prepared dog foods are chiefly responsible for the present new level of dog ownership in the United States, according to Harry Miller, director of the Gaines Dog Research Center, New York City. "So long as the homemaker had to think in terms of cooking special food for the family dog, the recognized American affinity for dogs could not have full play," Mr. Miller states. "But the popularization of prepared dog foods released the brake and as a result the per capita dog population in America today is the highest in our history."

According to Mr. Miller, prepared dog foods are not only work and time savers for the woman in the home but they are much better balanced and certainly more economical than what she could cook up herself. In fact, some of the prepared dog foods on the market are so scientifically balanced as to require nothing more than the addition of water - though few Americans can resist the temptation to give their canine pet a "little extra something" from the table.

"The meal-type dog food in particular has proven a blessing," he states. "The better brands contain every nutritional element dogs are known to need - they provide more than sufficient amounts of all the vitamins, minerals and amino acids the dog requires. With meal the main part of each feeding, meat, table scraps, milk,

TRAINING CLASSES TO FIGHT DELINQUENCY

Dog ownership "as a splendid means" of building character in young people and of fighting the rising tide of juvenile delinquency, is being urged by the Gaines Dog Research Center, New York City.

Sociologists have long recognized the challenge of continuing responsibility as a valuable factor in molding character. Dog ownership provides such responsibility to an ideal degree, the Center states. Looking after a dog's daily requirements, taking him out, feeding and caring for him, giving him needed attention when he is not well, and sharing with him innumerable experiences of a varied sort are invaluable aids that lead to a desirable maturity. Young people having a dog in their care are not likely to have the time or inclination to run the streets, engage in petty thievery or after-school fights, or other forms of juvenile gang terrorism.

The Center also suggested the inclusion of dog training courses as part of the curriculum in America's public schools. Such training would help greatly in teaching patience and overcoming objectionable personality traits, in addition to providing physical exercise, mental relaxation and other wholesome end-results. Perhaps the most valuable feature of such training would be in self-discipline, in giving the youngster satisfaction in the experience of control and in training him in the art of command, it states.

Story With No End

On they march: the unending lines of veterans requiring the assistance of trained workers, field directors, Home Service workers, volunteers and crafts instructors who stand ready to serve them through the Red Cross.

New chapters are written in the lives of members of our armed forces who need the friendly advice of field directors; in the memories of families worried about boys far from home. Recreation workers encourage hobbies, plan entertainment. Hospitalized men are stimulated by parties and fun. And the navy ashore is also served by the Red Cross recreation program.

And for a sequel - disaster relief necessitated by hurricane, tornado, fire, earthquake, explosion, epidemic, or flood follows through from on-the-spot aid to all forms of rehabilitation.

That is the brief outline of what the Red Cross stands ready to do for you. That is why your Red Cross needs your support as a friend and neighbor . . . and possibly some day a beneficiary of its great program of mercy and courage.
