AT HOME ON THE FARM

WITH THE CITY COUSIN

Three big trucks with Florida licenses and their human cargo of 45 Negro harvest hands pulled into the migrant labor camp at Bayboro and stopped at the door of the camp manager's office.

All this was new to me and the more I learned, my conception of the migrant and his place in the scheme of things began to change. Being a City Cousin whose only connection with such farm labor had been to eat their winter-picked Florida vegetables and their summer-harvested North Carolina cobbles, I admit I under-rated the importance of the migrant. I had thought of them as nomads with gypsy instincts, etc. I thought they were rowdy and troublesome. All these ideas were in for a serious going over after talking with F. S. Sloan, Farm Labor Supervisor for the State College Extension Service.

"They're necessary, all right," he says, "and a quiet bunch as a whole. Few people realize, Cousin, that growers in these eight counties where potatoes are a big cash crop, rely on migrants to harvest up to 90 per cent of their crops."

SPECIALISTS URGE FIRE PREVENTION

All the money you make from this season's crops won't begin to pay for the damage done if your house or barn is destroyed by fire this summer," David S. Weaver, at State College, said this week.

Here are a few of his simple precautions: See that you have adequate lightning protection; check your farm machinery and wiring for loose connections and frayed wiring. A careful inspection should be made of kerosene and gasoline storage places to make sure that no gas has overflowed. A single spark may cost you dearly. This is a good time to check fire extinguishers, too, and make sure they are in good working condition. Certain areas may not be adequately protected. Right now is the time to correct these.
