FARMERS ARE WARNED TO CONTINUE FIGHT AGAINST THE BOLL WEEVIL

The critical time for boll weevil damage comes when the pests begin migration. This usually occurs during the late fruiting season, and it is at this time the weevils begin moving from one field to another. When fruiting of the plant is about complete the weevils damage the bolls by feeding upon them and laying eggs in them.

Unless the farmer, from now on until the migration period is over, uses strict measures, the yield will be greatly reduced. If you need help in fighting this cotton destroying pest see your County Agent and let him aid in locating proper insecticides, etc.

POULTRY & EGGS

Fryers and broilers held firm at Central North Carolina points with farm pay prices at 33 cents. Hens were dull with prices unchanged and heavies at 23 to 25 and leg-horns at 18-20. Raleigh's egg grading stations reported light receipts and steady prices. Producers received 56 cents per dozen for A, large, and 46 to 50 for current collections.
