Dogs Derive Little From Bone Chewing

"Different Breeds Do Not Require Different Kinds of Food"

Should a dog be given bones? Except through the teething stage, when a puppy needs help to soothe the chewing urge and to build itself of baby teeth, there is no real benefit from such practice, states Russell K. Lowry in "Better Homes and Gardens."

Uncle Sam Says

Exactly how much have you saved in the last 12 months?

If you can't write a good big figure in the space above then you'd be smart to adopt a method of savings that millions of Americans have found to be absolutely sure fire. This method is the regular buying of United States Savings Bonds. People buy Savings Bonds now on two convenient plans. If you are on a payroll, through the Payroll Savings Plan. If you are a professional man or woman or self-employed, through the Bond-a-Month Plan at your bank. By signing up on either plan, twelve months from now you will be able to write a nice healthy sum in that space up above.

Grown dogs don't need bones.

statement of what every one should know about the proper feeding of his dog, the Gaines Dog Research Center, 250 Park Avenue, New York 17, New York, has reprinted it in booklet form, and will send a free copy to anyone who requests it.

Some of the more common superstitions about dog feeding are exploded in the booklet. "Milk does not cause worms," "Charlie or boiled onions do not eliminate worms," "If your dog eats his food, don't be concerned," "Different breeds do not require different kinds of food—only the quantity changes."

To quote further from the booklet: "Dogs are rugged individuals. Even two dogs out of the same litter may differ in their food requirements, their likes and dislikes. One may require a pound of food a day, where the other may thrive on less. One may have a hard time digesting vegetables, while his brother handles them 'famously.' For these reasons, it is explained, it is all but impossible to lay out a specific diet—that is, one by item—even for dogs of identical size and weight. Only by experience can the dog-owner learn the kind of food and its quantity which will best agree with his own pet."

Raise A Puppy, Then Baby, Couples Told

Raising of a puppy is the finest part of preparation for the raising of a baby, workers of the Gaines Dog Research Center, New York City, believe.

They point to the finding of Lawrence K. Frank, a recognized authority on child care who himself has raised six children and many puppies, and who states that a understanding of the fact that babies are "human puppies" can be of enormous help to parents in dealing with the problems and vicissitudes of raising a family. Both puppies and babies, when born, are dependent, helpless and demanding, he points out. They require frequent feedings and much sleep, and crave petting and affection. When hungry, hurt or uncomfortable they whimper or cry. Like the puppy, the baby will acquire politeness, emotional balance and self-discipline or will become a petulant and discordant individual depending on the manner in which he has been treated while small, he states.
