HOW TO SHOOT A RIFLE

By ARTHUR E. COOK National and Olympic Rifle Champion

Advanced Training

A bullet never travels in a straight line. As soon as it leaves the gun muzzle, gravity begins to pull it toward the ground. Therefore, at longer distances, the bullet is likely to fall short of the target unless (1) you deliberately aim high, or (2) you adjust your sights to compensate for the drop of the bullet.

The same thing applies to horizontal (or sideways) movement of the bullet due to wind while shooting outdoors. Particularly with small caliber bullets, wind is capable of blowing the bullet inches off course. Again it is necessary to compensate for this action.

If your rifle is equipped with an adjustable rear sight you need only to determine the amount of adjustment needed and the direction, and then turn the adjustment knobs the necessary amount. There is one basic rule to follow: MOVE THE REAR SIGHT IN THE SAME DIRECTION YOU WANT TO MOVE YOUR SHOTS.

Don't try sight adjustment until you have learned to put all your shots in a tight little group on the target. Then, if the group is not in the center you can correct the rifle's point of impact by adjusting the sights. Remember that a rifle is only as good as its sights—put the best ones you can afford on your gun.
