Duplin Negro Is Turkey Producer

By: R. E. WILKINS

Ed Dudley Monk, of the Stanford community in Duplin is not the boasting type, but he is doing a job worth boasting about.

Out behind his modern home amid the rows of corn and soy beans is Ed's small turkey enterprise. He is a brother-in-law to the successful producer, James Mainor of Sandy Cross community. This is Ed's first year as a turkey producer and he started with 1,000. Through no fault of his own, some 250 poultts died from Omphalitis, commonly known as Navel ill. This disease is usually contracted through improper incubation precautions, however, this disease only occurs from three to ten days after hatching. Ed Dudley now has about 750 vigorously growing turkeys and is thinking in terms of further diversification in the use of his land.

A massive pasture seeding demonstration will be held at his farm on or about August 26 with the Johnson Cotton Company of Wallace furnishing machinery and implements.
