Adult Calmness Important In Treating Children's Injuries

Where there are children, there are occasional emergencies calling for calm and prompt treatment. Wise mothers find it far easier to be calm when first-aid supplies are kept ready for use in a well-stocked medicine chest.

Bumped heads, scraped knees, skinned elbows call—first off—for a calm manner, a soothing voice. The injured child takes his cue from Mother. Then, simple first-aid treatment is in order.

Minor emergencies will be easier to handle if the medicine chest is kept supplied with a mild antiseptic, sterile gauze pads, a box of 100% sterile absorbent cotton balls, and sterile adhesive bandages.

Ice may be used to reduce the swelling of bruises or bumped knees. Warm water on a 100% sterile absorbent cotton ball will wash the area around a dirty scraped knee. Then, a sterile cotton ball should be used to apply antiseptic. Made of the finest sterilized surgical cotton, these ready-made cotton balls are handy for a variety of first-aid uses.

After swabbing with antiseptic, it's a good idea to cover the injury with a sterile adhesive bandage to protect it from further dirt.

Final step is to check and see whether this particular emergency used up the last of any first-aid item. If so, it's time to jot down on a shopping list the notation to buy more on the next trip to the druggist. You'll be ready then for whatever minor mishaps befall your active youngsters.
