CHARLESTON GARDENS IN RECORD BLOOM

The annual carnival of azalea color is now at its height in Charleston's world-famous gardens -- the earliest start of the full-bloom season on record. A progression of bloom of later varieties will carry the season well into April. Thanks to a blossom-lengthening spray developed on the spot by the U. S. Dept. of Agriculture, the color is as has never been seen before.

By train, plane, and car, visitors are arriving in Charleston, S. C., for the spectacular masses of azaleas which have sent such experts as John Galsworthy and Owen Winter into ecstasies. In the unworldly Cypress Gardens, the mysterious waters, tintured black by tanning moss-draped cypresses, reflect the blazing colors surrounding the lagoons.

At Middleton Gardens, America's first and internationally acclaimed landscaped garden, you will walk through veritable cannyons of color -- an experience to be always treasured. At Magnolia visitors can readily see why, even before the turn of the century, Baedeker's Guide marked with stars three "musts" for visitors to America: Niagara Falls, Grand Canyon, and Magnolia Gardens.

The three great gardens announce a bargain joint rate -- only $5 -- for the azalea season.
