Conservation Farming

By: GEORGE PENNY
SOIL CONSERVATION SERVICE

The results in field tests in soil building with Crotalaria on light sandy tobacco lands have been very successful, according to reports from several Duplin County farmers who grew tobacco behind this crop last year.

Paul Bass of Magnolia said, "My tobacco yield was at least one-fourth more in the part of my field where I had crotalaria the year before and the quality was just as good too." He has his entire tobacco crop behind crotalaria this year.

J. O. Stokes of Kenansville reported last year that crotalaria increased his tobacco yield by at least $200 per acre on his sandy land.

Tom Hill of Faison was also pleased with the results he got with tobacco after crotalaria.

It is getting a little late to plant this crop but it will still make satisfactory growth if planted in the next two weeks in, corn or tobacco middles or after harvesting small grain.

WEATHER

Weather conditions for the week ending June 10 continued favorable throughout the State. Rain-fall was mostly light to ample and soil moisture conditions "O.K." in practically all sections. Temperatures were generally favorable although a little on the cool side, especially at night.

Practically all crops have been planted and harvesting of small grains is becoming general.

Who Did Not Kill

Broken Fluorescent Lamps Dangerous

Broken fluorescent lamps may be dangerous and cause serious injury and poisoning unless extreme care is used in disposing of them. It is quite possible for a person to be seriously injured by glass from a broken fluorescent tube if there is a cut and the powder within the tube gets into a wound. Such an injury may require months to heal and may never heal without resort to surgery. Extreme cases may require the removal of muscle and even bone.

Dust or the mercury vapor from broken tubes must be prevented from getting into the human system either through a wound or through the nose or mouth.

Above all, steps should be taken to see that discarded tubes do not fall into the hands of children.

Do not attempt to pick up broken bits of tubes with the fingers. And should a tube become broken in the house, get out and stay out until all dust has settled. Never place discarded tubes with garbage or other rubbish to endanger some one who may not realize how extremely dangerous these tubes can be.

The most practical way of disposing of spent tubes is to dig a disposal pit, place tubes in the hole, cover with 5 or 6 inches of soil, pour water over the soil until saturated, then break the tubes with the point of a shovel by stabbing. After the job is completed the point of the shovel should be cut into the ground several times to rid it of anything that might be clinging to it.

While we are on the matter of dangerous fluorescent tubes, we might mention the fact that television picture tubes, while not so common, are far more dangerous. Should one be dropped near a person, breaking, the explosion will very likely fill the person's face, eyes, hands and legs with bits of poisonous glass. Television technicians are warned when handling picture tubes to wear goggles, heavy gloves and heavy clothing as a prevention of accident. Not only are picture tubes dangerous from flying glass and mercury poison, but an innocent tube lying on the table can give to the unwary a very severe electric shock although there are no electrical connections to power source whatsoever. In disposing of television picture tubes, technicians are advised to put them in their original factory container, seal it up, and then drive a steel rod through the container in the open air after
