Victor Mature AS Samson

It came as a surprise to almost no one when producer-director Cecil B. DeMille chose Victor Mature to portray Samson in the Technicolor epic, "Samson and Delilah," a Paramount picture that opens next Sunday at the Model Theatre, Beulaville. There simply was no other actor anywhere who fitted the qualifications for the part better than the rugged, handsome ex-Kentuckian.

Six feet-three inches tall and weighing some 200 pounds, Mature's physical resemblance to the biblical strong man is all that any producer could reasonably ask for. Talent-wise, he had proved his ability as a fine actor in such pictures as "Kiss of Death," "My Darling Clementine" and "Fury at Furnace Creek."

Despite Mature's reputation as something of an individualist, even by Hollywood standards, and DeMille's "business" approach to picture-making, the two got along famously—even when the incorrigible star slapped the venerable producer on the shoulder and enthused, "Stick with me, kid, and you'll be wearing diamonds."
