"LOOKIN' UP"
 healing ointment to me. But, catastrophe was in the offing. The sore throat I had was going to prove a mere speck in comparison to what I was getting. When I got home that night I had one of the most glorious sun tans from my neck to my waist I had ever had. Some people call it a sun tan but I have another name for it. I forgot the sore throat and the house and went to work and at last after a lot of grease and oils got over it. In the meantime the sore throat disappeared and again I thought I was a fine specimen of manhood able to do anything. Johnnie Mosley Bowden and his cohorts were able to do, but not without at least two shirts.

 Again I went back to the lot and started off again to work. We needed some cement blocks and I took a truck and went to Warsaw for them. I jumped in and helped load and unload them and I am sick again. I strained myself and I am again a small man.
 My ambitions to become a carpenter and a carpenter's helper are blasted. The visions of saving a lot of money by doing a lot of the work on our new home is blasted. The best thing I can do, I now realize, is to get me a large umbrella and seat myself under it out of the way of the carpenters and see the good work go on. When I say the umbrella I mean under the umbrella. We don't have any shade trees and I have found out I can not stand the sun or the work.

 Let this be a warning to Mosley Carr and John Dick. I have seen John Dick come to his lot and work about five minutes at a time several times but he had better beware.
 Next week I hope to have something for the column that will prove of interest but for this week all I can think about is my woes.

General Weather And Crop Summary
 A shift to more favorable weather conditions throughout most of the State developed during the week ending July 22, although damage to crops in local areas had occurred due to excessive rain and wet soils, crop prospects were generally favorable.

Subscribed to solely by Americans this is known as the "get up a gang and whip 'em before dark" school. This theory of assembling an army had it beginning in the early days of our republic and was put into practice in North Carolina during the Revolution when people in the vicinity of Kings Mountain arose soon one morning and "got up a gang" that whipped the pants off a bunch of British mercenaries who had strayed too far south. Tar-heel born General Andrew Jackson "got up a gang" of irregulars in New Orleans and roughed up another generation of Redcoats.

wars under the name of Selective Service.
 Because of the rapid advance of technological warfare we must now be able to "get up a gang" of trained men should the need arise. This is where the Organized Reserve Corps fits into the picture.

It serves not only as a training program but affords comradeship for the young men of our nation who are concerned about their country's security. Thanks to the ORC we shall be able to "get up a gang" of ready trained civilians if the need arises.

ARMY EDITOR
An American Way
 The American philosophy of military might has always been a sort of mystery to the rest of the world. Europeans and Asiatics in particular have never quite understood our unwillingness to keep a large standing army. To their thinking, a nation's army should grow in proportion to its size and wealth. An inconspicuous show of military strength is a sign of weakness to them.
 Unique among our ideas on military matters is that of mobilization.
