COLOR PARADE IN NORTH CAROLINA

The annual autumn color parade is forming in the mountains. It will begin on the mile-high peaks in late September and march down the slopes to full resplendence in October and early November. It's easier to get to this year than ever before. Autumn is the uncrowded time to visit the mountains, and many inns are open to greet travelers who choose this time of year with brisk days and azure skies and blazing yellow orange and reds of turning leaves for leisurely touring.

It's Time to Winterize Your Home

With winter just around the corner, it's time for the wise homeowner to take stock of the condition of his home in respect to its ability to withstand the rough weather ahead. Paint, of course, is the most common protector of building materials, whether they're wood, metal or concrete. According to E. D. Peck, general paint manager of the Pittsburgh Plate Glass Company, deferring painting once it has become necessary, is one of the most serious mistakes the new homeowner can make. So a little judicious use of paint now, will save many dollars in repairs later on. The best way to start is by making a list of all spots that look like they need attention. Check the joints, copings, window sash and other corners that normally escape attention. Then consult your local paint dealer and he can tell you what types of paints belong where. Where old paint is bad and must be taken off, the best method is careful burning off with a blow torch. This leaves the surface clean and able to hold the new coat. After all paint has been removed, cracks must be filled with putty to prevent moisture from entering. Nail holes should be filled and loose boards nailed down. Then, of course, the last step in painting which, when completed, leaves you with the comfort and knowledge that your home is really weather-tight.

Stays Whiter, Looks better longer!
Cool smoke or industrial fumes will not discolor it. It's self-cleaning, too.
