... help Social Security

... we have been receiving a steady stream of letters, telephone calls and personal visits from people who wish more information about their obligation to report such an employment," he added.

According to Mr. Avera, some confusion still exists with respect to when such employment must be reported to the Collector of Internal Revenue.

"There are two tests which must be met before the employer needs

Poultry Circular

Plenty of good, common "chicken sense" is needed by a farmer who wants to be successful with a flock. The same rule applies to laundresses, housekeepers, nurses, gardeners, furriers, men, handy men, valets, footmen, grocers, chauffeurs of privately owned cars, practical nurses, etc. The term "maid" does not include the above employes on a farm. Such employes are classified as "agricultural workers" and must qualify under the rules for farm workers.

Mr. Avera added that his office has available for distribution, upon request, a booklet entitled, "Do You Have a Maid?" which is very easily understood. The last page is a tear-off which the employer completes and mails to the Collector of Internal Revenue at Greensboro, N. C. This is necessary in order that the domestic employe may be assigned an identification number by the Collector. This will be the number under which the employer files her returns. By completing and mailing the card, the employer is also put on the Collector's mailing list for report forms, bulletins and information which the Collector's office sends out from time to time.

The booklets may be obtained by card, letter, telephone call, or a personal visit to the local Social Security office in Wilmington, N. C.
