GOVERNMENT TESTS PROVE WORMS HOGS MEANS MORE PROFIT

By Dr. E. N. LeGoon

Tests made by the U. S. Department of Agriculture at the Beltsville Experiment Station proved that infestations of large round worms seriously affected the growth of pigs. In this experiment pigs were intentionally infected with worms and after four months of feeding they were butchered and examined. One pig found to be harboring 109 round worms actually weighed 83 1/2 lbs. less at slaughter than it did four months earlier at the beginning of the feeding period. Its control mate, which was kept free of worms, had gained 96 lbs. during the same period. This shows that the body worm infested pig actually represented a loss of 104 1/2 lbs. of pork.

This is a pretty strong argument in favor of keeping your hog free of worms by regular worming.

Now, that a one day treatment is available greater profits from your hogs are possible. And the new type hog worm powder can be fed in slop. Simply mix with feed or slop and the hogs worm themselves. You don't have to dose each hog separately. No loss of extra work and the new hog worm powder does not affect the appetite of the hogs as they go right on eating and gaining without a setback.

This new, safe and economical hog worm powder contains Phenothiazine and Oil of Clove (American Plant Seed), combined with Milk. It is generally available.

Sports Afield

The other day I ran across a discussion of winter camping by Robert Ormes who is an expert in outdoor living. He pointed out that the summer camper keeps dry for comfort; the winter camper must keep dry for safety.

He may pitch his tent on snow, provided the snow is cold enough to remain underneath, but he must be careful, not to melt it with the combination of body heat and pressure. He should have either a layer of boughs under the tent floor or an air mattress above it, and preferably both. And he should fluff up the bed to make the most of its insulating quality. If you feel cold in bed, the chances are five to one that the cold is crawling from underneath.

If your clothes become moist they should on no account be worn at night. It is safer to sleep with no clothes on than with wet ones. Each day dry out the moisture in your sleeping bag by hanging it wrong side out, preferably where sunlight and a breeze gets to it.

Food for a cold-weather trip should be planned carefully. It is best to keep away from the things that have a high water content. Fresh fruits and fresh or canned vegetables that can freeze are a nuisance to keep insulated from cold. Dried fruits, meats, cheese and dehydrated varieties of soups and vegetables are not hurt by it.

Cooking should be simple. It is enough to get a one-pot meal twice a day. This and hot tea, coffee or soup to go with it will be work, especially when conditions are rugged. But hot food is your morale, and no amount of weariness or weather should stampee you out of preparing it properly. Clean snow makes perfectly good cooking water, but if you drink it you should add a pinch of salt to kill the flatness. Melting it down is tricky. It has to be stirred at the start or it will merely sublimate and let your pot burn.

A small liquid-fuel stove is very useful. It keeps you independent of the campfire and even when you do build one it cuts down the meal-getting time. In a blizzard your outdoor fire may not be worth the struggle it takes to maintain it.

You can pull your stove into the tent and cook there. You have to be careful of your movements and careful to provide ventilation, but the heat it gives off and the warm glow it provides will take care of your basic needs.
