SAFETY HINTS

Boating and Canoeing: Step in the middle of a boat, find a seat and keep it! If you can't swim, wear a life-preserver or stay ashore.

Get your Suntan Gradually: Five to fifteen minutes on the first day is long enough. A protective ointment helps prevent burn. Wear a hat if you're in the sun for a long period. Recommended for summer sun tan: Make your own remedy for an even tan—1-2 cup olive oil, 1-2 cup vinegar. Stir in one tablespoon iodine. Blend into your skin evenly before exposing yourself to the sun.

Poisonous Plants and Insects: Learn to recognize poison ivy, poison oak, and poison sumac. The leaves are oval-shaped and grow in groups of three. Mature plants have white, waxy berries. If you run into these plants wash with strong soap and hot water as soon as possible.

Relieve insect stings with a baking soda paste or calamine lotion. A drop of turpentine, kerosene or gasoline usually kills wood ticks.

While we are between crops, in a sense, we should be thinking of ways to improve our garden soils.

Much needed organic matter may be added through the use of table manures or summer and fall green crops to be turned under. Field peas, soybeans, or vetch are good crops to turn under. In the late fall, or crimson clover may be sown in August or September to be turned under next spring. For eastern and central North Carolina I like crimson clover. These materials will make heavy soils easier to work and will give sandy soils a better water holding capacity, and along with that, there is the added fertility.

The average gardener probably understands little about soil acidity and the proper use of lime. That is because he usually does not know the needs of the individual crops. Also, he does not know how lime because someone suggests that his crops will grow better if he uses it. It is foolish to add lime to soil if you do not know that it needs lime or that the crops to be grown require more lime.

Lime reduces soil acidity. Most vegetable crops will thrive in slightly acid (pH to 6.7) soils but there are a number of them that will not thrive at all in very acid (pH 4.5 to 5.0) soils. These are asparagus, spinach, celery, onions, lettuce, beets, muskmelons, cauliflower, broccoli, parsnips, and salicy. Crops such as beans, cucumbers, corn, watermelons, sweet potatoes, and pumpkins are not affected by soil acidity.

Mrs. Horace Tyndall is visiting in New York City.
