More Part-Time Employment Possible For Old Age And Survivors Beneficiaries

People under 75 who are receiving old age and survivors insurance are now permitted to earn up to $75 per month and still accept their monthly benefit checks, under the new amendments to the Social Security Act, effective September 1, 1932. There are no restrictions on earnings for people over 75.

The law used to require the suspension of benefits for any month in which the person receiving old age and survivors insurance earned over $50; and since this was less than one week's work at $1.50 an hour, not many companies could employ these people even on a part-time basis. However, with the beneficiaries now permitted to earn up to $75 per month, many companies (this company can now place many people in regular part-time employment for short periods each week, or to augment seasonal work on week ends.

With the present high cost of living, many people ask why the earning restriction is in the law at all, and its removal has been advocated. However, if the $75 per month 'work clause' were removed, many people would be working full-time and receiving benefits even though no more in need of them than any other regularly employed person. This would increase the monthly cost of social security old age and survivors insurance so much that there would have to be a substantial increase in the contribution rate or an over all decrease in the amount of the benefits.

Many of the old age and survivors insurance beneficiaries are widows with small children, who ordinarily have to spend the major part of their time by the home, and it is desirable to have the amount of their benefits as large as possible. This insurance undertaking to replace part of the income lost due to retirement, or to the death of the family provider, and it is not intended to provide payments to persons merely for having reached the age of 65. It is for people who are able to take full employment.
