Announce Births

White-Tailed Kite
01922 National Wildlife Federation

If you see a bird that looks like a sea gull with a head of an owl, don't shoot it but notify the National Wildlife Federation, 3308 Fourteenth Street, N. W., Washington, D. C. You have probably had the rare experience of finding a white-tailed kite. Conservationists are trying to learn just how many of these beautiful little white birds make it an easy and unporting target. Thoughtless boys with guns attracted by this unusual bird are probably the primary cause for its scarcity.

Mrs. Otto Matthews Bridge Hostess

Mrs. Otto Matthews entertained her friends last Friday evening with four tables of bridge. Roses, smoky reds and dahlias were used in her floral arrangements.

The club high was won by Mrs. R. W. Riggs who was given a gravy boat dish. Mrs. P. S. Mitchener was given a miniature flashlight for tors high and Mrs. J. H. Hines received a miniature flashlight for traveling. Mrs. John A. Johnson was presented an appropriate gift at this time.

At the end of play, Mrs. Matthews served coffee and individual pics.

BE READY... Harvest when Weather and Crop are Right

The farmer who has his own ALL-CROP Harvester is ready and waiting for his soybean crop to mature.

When the crop is ready and the weather is right... an ALL-CROP Harvester, priced for home ownership, can harvest your soybean crop without delay. And that's important! Tomorrow it may rain, damage your crop, turn your fields into a sea of mud.

Yes, a few days' difference can be mighty important. So be prepared this year to harvest ahead of the weather with your own ALL-CROP Harvester — built by Allis-Chalmers.

ALL-CROP is an Allis-Chalmers trademark.

The white-tailed kite is common in the South. It is an owl-like bird with a long, pointed tail. It is a highly favored bird by hunters and only because of its rarity, its dull, delicate coloration and its habit of flying in pairs, not alone. Like a human it enjoys championship several nesting within a few hundred yards. It is always seen in pairs, be it hunting or playing; and it loves to play. If a large hawk or crow comes within range the pair will pursue the hapless bird, with seeming delight, taking turns diving at it from a considerable height. When no such target is at hand they will playfully fly at each other in mock battle. They have long slim wings with a 40 inch spread and soar for hours like swallows.

White-tailed kite has been seen in the city watching intently for its prey, one perch upon its plume with half folded wings, nor will it fly over the water and elsewhere like a marsh hawk. Instead it flies about in a random sort of way until it spots a mouse, its major food. Then rather leisurely it raises its wings and with legs dangling, drops unerringly. Despite its unorthodox method, the white-tailed kite is a highly beneficial mousetrap.

One of these birds was seen in Texas in 1946, another in Florida in 1949. Only in California were left in the United States. At California and not unusual from coastal Texas to Florida and north to Oklahoma and South Carolina.

They have been seen in the mountains of the West, but the future of this remarkable little bird is not secure until every one carrying a gun is helping to save it.

Milo is recommended by the State College School of Agriculture as a late summer and winter grazing crop for turkeys.
