

The October estimate on cotton production was 2,000,000 bales, greater than the September estimate. As expected, a break in the cotton market followed and the situation resulted in a statement of the cotton market in general. The cotton market is a part of which is quoted below. Cotton supplies are still short of prospective demand and there is every indication that higher prices can be obtained later in the season. It is expected that the crop in an orderly manner. A calm appraisal of the situation clearly shows that there is no sound reason for panic selling by farmers. On the other hand, there is every reason why farmers should take advantage of the extensive loan facilities available to them.
