tenant owns equipment permits the tenant to become a property owner which Ratchford says is highly desirable. He points out that one barrier to tenants owning equipment is the lack of money or credit. Some landlords remedy this by selling equipment to tenants and taking a mortgage on it.

Thousands of Farm Workers Now Have Social Security

Thousands of farm or ranch workers and their families now have social security insurance protection, according to N. A. Avera, manager of the Wilmington, N. C. office of the Social Security Administration. Agricultural labor has been covered by social security since January, 1, 1931, when the worker is regularly employed Avera explained. The farm or ranch worker who has put in the past two years in regular agricultural work has insurance protection for two more years for his family in case of his Sink cabinet should provide space for holding cleaning supplies, brushes, towels. Cooking Center: Deep drawers in the range will hold skillets, lids and saucepans. Storage next to the range is the spot for cooking and serving utensils—ladles, wooden spoons, spatulas, etc. This area too is a good spot for toaster, waffle iron and trays. Adequate storage space in the kitchen saves many extra steps from one spot to the other. Well organized equipment makes for efficient work. Plan your storage the way that will help you most.

Question: I have a half-share agreement with my landlord and recently I've been trying to get him to buy a tractor but he seems to think that the tenant should furnish power. Who's right?
Answer: C. B. Ratchford in charge of farm management and marketing for the State College Extension Service agrees with the landlord and he says that half-share tenant agreements where the landlord furnishes power and equipment are hindering mechanization in North Carolina.

He asserts that there are other reasons why the tenant should own equipment: It is not advisable to let one person use expensive equipment belonging to another person. Also, an arrangement in which the
