Garden Time

By Robert Schmidt

There are many things to do in the garden in June such as take up, divide and transplant blue flag or bearded iris, juncos and daffodils, tulips and Dutch iris. Also prune, stake and tie dahlias and tomatoes - mulch these two crops if you want to eliminate some of the problems of cultivation. Side-dress sweet corn with nitrate of soda when it gets knee-high. Give your lawn a topdressing of nitrate of soda just before a rain or water it in with a hose. And while we are on the subject of water, during the summer heat most horticultural plants should be supplied with approximately one inch of water a week either by rain or irrigation. The quality of vegetables will be seriously affected unless they receive sufficient water at the critical periods.

It is also time in June or early July to sow seed of tomatoes, collards and broccoli for the fall crop. Use a wilt resistant variety of tomatoes such as Homestead, Southland or Jefferson. Fall tomatoes will not be successful if your soil is infested with root-knot nematodes. Although many people plant collard seed in the spring and grow large plants, the most tender collards are those sowed in July and August. The plants are not as large when cold weather comes but the quality is much better. Green sprouting broccoli has become popular - especially for freezing. Seed should be planted in late July or early August in order that the main crop of buds will mature before heavy freezes occur. The plant will withstand some frost but is sometimes severely damaged. DeCiccio is a good variety for North Carolina.

Here Is a Double-Duty Blanket and Spread

BY EDNA MILES

SO many things are happening these days to simplify the bed-making task that keeping up with them requires real attention to the subject at hand. Fitted sheets, top and bottom; lightweight blankets in gay plaid and pastels for summer; and fitted blankets are some of the many bonuses for the homemaker.

Newest of these is a bed-covering bedspread developed by a firm of famous blanket makers. It's a handsome bedspread on one side and a fleecy, brush-nap blanket on the other. This eliminates the need for both a blanket and spread. This cuts down the entire bed-making operation too, and coupled with fitted sheets, practically reduces the whole matter to a flip of the wrist. It keeps the bedrooms looking neat and pares expenses too.

Furthermore, you can choose this blanket-spread in any one of contrasting decorator colors and in twin or double sizes. You can treat it to a hand-laundering or pop it into your machine since it's guaranteed against shrinkage and is color fast.

Sides of this blanket-spread are handsomely fringed. The top and foot have luxurious eight-inch binding which make it a pleasure to own.

This homemaker is making up a bed with a new combination - blanket-bedspread, woven as a single fabric. She is able to cut down on the bed-making operation and shave expenses. Blanket-spread comes in a choice of contrasting decorator colors.

has also served as flagship for the Destroyer Flotilla Commander in the Western Pacific, Rear Admiral V. D. Long, USN.

The Humul was based at Japanese ports while performing its repair and replenishment duties. These ports were Yokosuka, the former headquarters of the Imperial Japanese Navy, which is on Tokyo Bay on Honshu Island, and Sasebo, which is on Japan's southern island, Kyushu.

CAVEMAN COOPERATION

The cooperative principle is hardly what you'd call new or radical.

Cooperation probably began before the dawn of history, when man first achieved the intelligence to realize that many things, which he was not big enough or strong enough to do for himself, were a lot easier when he joined forces with other men. In fact, the only way primitive man was able to survive his cruel environment was by working with his fellows.

Men have been working together to their mutual advantage ever since. Back in 1752, Ben Franklin and some other early Americans saw a common need, and they acted together on it, founding the first cooperative venture of its kind in this country—a fire insurance company on the mutual or cooperative plan.

In 1844 a Boston tailor got some of his friends interested in cooperation and started a chain of real cooperative stores. In the same year, in England, a group of flannel weavers founded a cooperative enterprise, the famous Rochdale store.

So, in 1935, when establishment of REA made the funds necessary to electrify rural America available, it was a natural thing to turn to the cooperative principle as the means of applying these funds to the job. There were plenty of farmers who knew all about cooperative marketing and purchasing.

The faith that rural Americans have placed in the cooperative principle has been justified by the progress made so far in electrifying the farms of this country.

We are proud to be called a 'rural electric cooperative'.
