Bond Issue For Schools, Mental Institutions Sound, Gill

Southern Pine, N. C. — The proposed bond issue for North Carolina public schools and mental hospitals is a sound and justified proposal, State Treasurer Edwin Gill told the Sandhills Kiwanis Club here on August 26.

"The need is great, the cause is worthy, and the sound financial condition of North Carolina amply justifies such action," the State Treasurer said in an address before one of the few county-wide civic clubs in America, embracing a membership from throughout Moore County. Speaking as one familiar with the fiscal history of North Carolina for the past 25 years, Mr. Gill, who served as North Carolina Commissioner of Revenue and as North Carolina Collector of Internal Revenue for the government of the United States before becoming State Treasurer, said: "I do not hesitate to endorse the issuance of these bonds."

North Carolina will vote October 3 on the issuance of bonds totaling $5 million for public schools and $2 million for mental hospitals.

"On October 3 North Carolina has a date with destiny," Mr. Gill said. "On this day, we will decide a great issue which involves not only the welfare of hundreds of the mentally ill, but also the future of many thousands of children in the public schools."

"Are we to continue the march of progress which began with Aycock in 1900? Surely there can be but one answer. We will not turn back the clock. On this important day, North Carolina will tell the world that she is able and willing to take care of her own. Every humane and progressive instinct that has characterized the spirit of North Carolina for the past 50 years predicts that we will vote 'yes' on October 3."

"There is no question about the need. Those best informed as to the state of our mental hospitals, and those who have given their lives to leadership in education, tell us that these funds are absolutely essential to the maintenance of minimum standards and requirements. What they say to us is underscored by those of the mentally ill who are still held in jails and in other places not suited to their conditions - and by crowded school rooms, in some cases inadequately ventilated and lighted and without satisfactory sanitary facilities.

"In my opinion, we are not only faced with the demands of a great cause which lie heavily on our heart and conscience, but we are faced with an opportunity to make a sound investment in our own future. Like physical resources, our human assets require judicious conservation and development."
