Come In My Garden

by MRS. L. L. HUFFMAN

There is something definitely wrong with the world today. Could it be that we are getting too far away from nature? Years ago Wordsworth said so beautifully: "The world is too much with us late and soon; getting and spending, we lay waste our powers; little we see in nature that is ours."

When God made man he planted him in a garden, and when Jesus wanted strength he was found in a garden or by the sea, alone. Here He spent hours in meditation and prayer undisturbed. Here He found answers to all His problems. Here He found peace and quiet and harmony.

"The world is too much with us, late and soon." That is more truth than poetry. We have no privacy, we have nothing but chaos around us. The radio blares, the TV grips our attention the minute we open the front door, the telephone rings, the noisy children in our own house, or the house next door keep our nerves unstrung. There is no peace, there is no quiet, there is no harmony.

Oh yes, there is, but many of us have never found it. It is here at my back door, and yours, if you but claim it. Come into my garden and let me tell you about it. When we bought this place it had grown up in briars and brambles sky high, to the very back door. Having grown up in a lovely garden as a little girl I couldn't -- well, as the old gardener said, "I couldn't vibrate without a garden."

We called in several men and had the entire plot cleared in a few days, the ground broken and planted in grass with borders laid off for shrubs. Having paid too much for the house in the first place we could not afford to buy shrubs; friends donated "limbs" from theirs. We pushed them down in the ground and they all grew. Now we have a private place where we can go out and be alone with the trees, the flowers, the sky, the birds, and the bees. We can cry, we can laugh, we can sing, we can pray, all undisturbed and unseen by any, save God alone.

When days are dark, when sorrows come, when friends forsake us, we have only to go down in the garden and plant a seed, a tree, a vine. We look for that particular trouble, but lo, it has disappeared! Try it for yourself.

Miss Lucy Ellen Wells is the daughter of Mrs. James David Wells of Rose Hill and the late Mr. Wells. Her engagement to Maurice G. Farrior, son of Mr. and Mrs. W. P. Farrior of Willard, is announced by her mother. A fall wedding is planned.

Miss Melvina Hobson, who at present is director of Religious Education at the Shandon Presbyterian Church, Columbia, South Carolina, will be one of the teachers in the Presbyterian Leadership School that is scheduled to be held in the Wallace Presbyterian Church beginning Monday night October 5, at 7:30 p. m., and continuing through Friday night, October 9.

Miss Hobson Will Teach At Leadership School

Miss Melvina Hobson, who at present is director of Religious Education at the Shandon Presbyterian Church, Columbia, South Carolina, will be one of the teachers in the Presbyterian Leadership School that is scheduled to be held in the Wallace Presbyterian Church beginning Monday night October 5, at 7:30 p. m., and continuing through Friday night, October 9.

Miss Hobson will teach a course to which the young people of the church are especially urged to attend. In this course she will seek to lead the young people and their adult leaders into a better understanding of the total program of a church's activities for young people, thus enabling them to gain more from their church work as well as become an asset to the work of the church as a whole.

Miss Hobson is a native of Anderson, South Carolina, and received her education at Anderson Junior College, Winthrop College, and Assembly's Training School in Richmond, Virginia. She has had experience in educational work in the Highland Institute, Guerrant, Kentucky, and has held various positions in youth work and church work before going to the Shandon Presbyterian Church.

The Leadership School School in Wallace is being conducted by the Presbyterian Churches of this area, and in addition to the course for young people there will be a course on Church Music, taught by Dr. James R. Sydnor, another on Teaching Children, taught by Miss Sallie Throver, and a fourth on a Bible study of the Book of Ephesians, taught by the Rev. W. R. Smith, Jr.

Know Your Students by Name

By GARY CLEVELAND BYERS, Ph.D.

I SHALL never forget a short visit to a high school in Erie, Pennsylvania, some years ago.

As I recall, the principal told me there were about 600 students there. But what impressed me most was that as I walked with him through the halls he spoke to ever so many students between classes, addressing them always by their names.

"You seem to know the names of all of them," I remarked.

"All but just a few of the new ones," he replied. "I work at it."

Then I said, "Perhaps some of your teachers don't know the names of nearly all their students, as you do."

"Yes," he replied, "and that's something that always bothers me. I do so wish they would work harder at it."

An Essential

Of course, it's not easy for a high school teacher, who must teach a total of several hundred students, to learn all their names. Yet any person smart enough to teach in high school could learn all his students' names if he made it the first essential of his job.

Have you ever asked a teacher about your son or daughter in the junior or senior high school, and discovered that this teacher didn't know the student by name? How much more one might be shocked to discover that the teacher of a child in the second or third grade didn't recognize the child by name.

In Large Classes

To be sure, some special teachers of the upper grades must teach a number of classes of children, perhaps as many as some high school teachers. But we certainly expect the regular teacher of a single class to know her children's names soon after school begins.

In this respect, some elementary teachers are truly wonderful. They are able to address each child by his first name, at least by the end of the second or third day. One wishes it were possible for every regular teacher in the grades to learn her students' names by the end of the first week.

Suggestions to Teachers

Nothing else can be so important as learning early your students' names. It will help you if you use each child's name at every reasonable opportunity and encourage your pupils in group discussions to address one another by name.

Some names, especially family names, will be unfamiliar to you and often hard to pronounce. In private, ask the child with such a name to help you with the pronunciation. Call the roll daily for the first few weeks. The time required will be well spent. Be careful never to smile or make an unkind remark on saying a name that strikes you as strange. Should other children laugh, rebuke them. No name is funny when we realize how much a part of a person his name is.

Of course, you will do more than know each child's name. You should also learn about his parents and other loved ones. You will best acquire this information as you make each child feel you care about him and those close to him.
