Magazine Features North Carolina
The January issue of the Manufacturers' Record features North Carolina with 44 pages devoted to the story of the State's industrial leadership in the South.

Twenty stories, 88 photographs and numerous statistical tables and charts, including a 4-color double spread may showing location of principal raw products and principal railroads, airlines, navigable rivers and natural gas lines, are required to present the North Carolina story in the business magazine which is published in Baltimore and circulated throughout the nation.

The lead story is by State Treasurer Edwin Gill. It is entitled "Steady and Stable" and notes North Carolina's record of good government and economic progress without increasing state taxes. A story telling of amazing recent progress is entitled "Re-Checking" by Stanley E. Cohen, Washington editor of "Advertising Age." Roy E. Larson, president of Time Magazine, sketches "The Big Change" in North Carolina in the last half century.

A feature article deals with the State's diversified industry "From Aircraft to Zippers." Other illustrated stories cover power, water, transportation, markets, labor, recreation, technical education, agriculture, mining, forestry, fisheries, banking and finance, health and other subjects. Concise, easily readable tables present statistics on the State's business and manufacturing operations up to date through 1952.

Since extra copies of the magazine are not available in large number, the Department of Conservation and Development is having 25,000 copies of the North Carolina section reprinted and specially bound in a full-color cover depicting typical North Carolina scenes from coast to mountains. Director Ben E. Douglas said these reprints are expected from the press about the middle of February and that a copy may be obtained free upon request to the Department.
