particular perspective - about their studies - write compact surveys and then compare findings in assemblies each Monday night. After 3 months of comprehensive and critical surveys the committees will make concrete proposals relative to how improvements can be made in each area. Homer is the first Alaskan community to undertake this comprehensive study of local resources. There are thousands of mostly unexplored natural resources, fertile lands, limitless fish resources, untold recreational possibilities. We have every intention of developing these resources - and of providing means of employment locally through use of local resources. Now, to another phase of life here in Homer - the weather! We're proud of our weather here. Our coldest weather this winter has been about ten or twelve below - and is now much warmer. We have the most beautiful terrain I've ever seen. Service trees towering majestically - erect, into the blue - covered with snow. You've no idea how beautiful it really is. Even so the snow is due to soon begin disappearing - for spring can't long be held back - now that long days and warm weather is here.
