Civil Defense Chief Discloses Plan State Participation In "Operation Alert"

Raleigh, May 25 — Communications, Ground Observer Corps and the state's degree of readiness to lend support to neighboring states in event of enemy attack or natural disaster will be under test during the scheduled Civil Defense Exercise affecting the entire North American continent on June 14-15, State CD Director Edward F. Griffin said today announcing plans for North Carolina participation.

"There may be little reason to take pride in the way our state stacks up," Griffin said, "even in the support role to which we have been assigned."

"But," he added, "the test is sorely needed to disclose the fact that North Carolina - to us the most important part of a nation on a continent which may be subjected to devastating attack - is not prepared to carry her part of the load."

"Since 'Operation Alert' is primarily a communications drill and a hypothetical atomic attack on 42 'critical target' cities - none of which are located in this state - no North Carolina cities will be tested for performance under atomic attack, but many North Carolina communities plan local civil defense exercises.

"The exercise plan calls for direct atomic 'hits' on five critical target cities in three adjoining states. Calls will come in for help, which we can answer only within the limitations imposed by what our communities are actually prepared to deliver, if the disaster were real. Full instructions for participation are being sent to local directors who have indicated willingness to take part in the test.

"North Carolina's assumed special situation will consist of an 'alert notice' received by the Governor. Acting with the Council of State he will in turn declare the state in 'imminent danger' and order the State Civil Defense Director to put prepared plans into operation, employing any powers authorized by ## of valuable things as well as many serious shortcomings" Griffin concluded, in any event, we will take the test hoping that it will create a new awareness in N.C. we are just as dependent on other states as they are on us.

"The State Control Center will remain open from 10 AM June 14 through 10 AM June 15 - the full test period, unless closed earlier by order of FCDA. During that time, communication by telephone, teletype and radio will be maintained with FCDA and with participating communities.

"Approximately 30 N. C. radio stations will operate on CONELRAD Federal Communications Commission's emergency broadcast plan, during Radio Test Hours.

"Charlotte and Durham Filter Centers and all Ground Observation Posts serving those centers will be on 24 hour duty.

"The exercise will point up a lot

I'm looking out for my future and there is no better way than by a savings account. It doesn't take great amounts occasionally, but small ones deposited at regular intervals that really make a savings account grow.
