Baptists Support Decision

The Southern Baptist Convention last week, like the Southern Presbyterians of the week before, declared its support of the Supreme Court decision outlawing segregation in public schools.

The convention in session in St. Louis, Mo., adopted by a vote of 700 to 100 a resolution which is "in harmony with the constitutional guarantee of equal justice and love for all men."

With some 2,000 persons attending the convention session, only about 50 persons voted against the stand recommended by the convention's Christian Life Commission.

Convention recommendations are not binding on any Southern Baptist church or members. Under the convention constitution, delegates to the convention have no power to commit their local churches any issue.

No Change in N. C. Schools

North Carolina will run its public schools next year on the same segregation basis as before, according to the State Board of Education last week.

There can be no turn to non-segregated schools, it said, until the U. S. Supreme Court adds to its historic statement of principle the answers to such vital questions as when and how.

It was the board's first meeting since the segregation decision in Washington. The board began its "D-Day" meeting with closed-door session of thirty minutes with Governor Umstead. Later in the day the Governor disclosed that the meeting had produced a decision to call off work on the pending formula "until the situation is further clarified." The "uncertainties" resulting from the recent decision of the Supreme Court, dictated the decision, he said.

Senate Approves Farm Bill

The Senate last week approved a $1,063,000,000 farm appropriation for the fiscal year starting July 1, about 100 million dollars more than Eisenhower requested.

The bill now goes back to the House for consideration, and a Senate House conference committee probably will have to adjust many differences before the measure is passed.

Plans For An Eclipse

Probably the most elaborate plans ever made for observing an eclipse of the sun are now being completed. The eclipse will occur on June 30 and will be total from the flat plains of Nebraska, half way around the world to India.

A New York Times account of the plans says that from sunrise in Nebraska to sunset in India the eclipse will be watched by the scientists. Along this route seventy-four volunteer scientists will be stationed with sensitive new electrical and optical devices for timing the passage of the great shadow.

Supplied by an Air Force airlift and linked together by a vast radio network, the scientists will time as accurately as possible the passage of the shadow as it reaches each station. The time at each station for observation of totality will range from ninety seconds to two minutes. Along the entire 8,000 mile path of totality, the sun will be eclipsed for two hours and forty-five minutes.

A "White Paper"

A "White Paper," issued by the Pentagon recently, accused Russia of "masterminding" the Korean war, saying that Russia put from 6,000 to 12,000 troops into Korea in advance of the armistice and that Russia still controls the North Korean government through Soviet citizens.

The charges were made in a series of documents, which the Defense department said were based on "intelligence research and examination of many sources of information."

The timing, the content, and the fact that it was the Pentagon that released the documents appeared to be an effort to draw a parallel between Soviet activity in Korea and Chinese Communist operations in Indo-China.

One document was captioned, "The Truth About Soviet Involvement in the Korean War." Another was, "Chinese Communist Aggression and Barbarism in Korea."

A third, "Soviet Assistance to North Korean Forces Subsequent to 1948," was a catalogue of Russian made equipment stockpiled in North Korea before the Korean Reds attacked the Republic of South Korea.

The issuance of a white paper by military is unusual. Customarily, that is a function of a diplomatic department.

The great Lick Observation in California has recently completed an enormous photograph of the night sky, according to an account in the New York Times. The picture is made up of 1,246 photographs each seventeen inches square. Each film required an exposure of two hours, and the whole took about seven years of work with a specially constructed camera. The finished picture, if assembled on one surface, would cover a space of about 2,500 square feet.

The films, says the New York Times account, show the stars that are observable in the Northern hemisphere and cover about three-quarters of the entire sky. Stars as far away as one hundred million light years are included. Because astronomers can tell which of the stars in the picture are relatively nearby and which are far away, they will be able to determine in future years something about galactic rotation. When a similar picture is made a comparison of the two will enable astronomers to tell how the Milky Way rotates.

Bells for America

The Netherlands on the ninth anniversary of that country's liberation from Nazi domination presented to the United States a forty-nine bell carillon. The carillon is offered as an expression of "the thanks of a grateful people for help from the United States in their darkest hour."

The bells are the gift of the citizens of Holland. Each bell is decorated with sculpture, emblazoned with a verse in Dutch. Each is dedicated to the province or group that gave it. Three Dutch bell foundries collaborated in casting the carillon, one of three hundred of its kind in the world.

The United States has not yet provided a permanent home for the bells. Meanwhile they are on an open scaffold-like structure near Washington.

A Bit of Humor

A party of American tourists was traveling in Italy and they were being taken on a guided tour of the ruins of Pompeii, which was destroyed by an eruption in 79.

ARE DOGS COLOR BLIND?

Are dogs color blind? Choose your side and line up. Whichever opinion you hold you will find plenty of dog owners to agree with you and even some scientific literature to prove your point.

Dr. Orbell, an associate of Pavlov's ran two series of tests. From the first he concluded that dogs have no color sense at all. From the second, he achieved with difficulty, positive results with one dog. At about the same time, two other experimenters ran tests using a series of grey papers and colored papers and found that it was relatively easy to train a dog to select green from among the greys - with the exception of the darker greys. Then the dog became confused. And when they changed the shape of the green paper, the dog was accustomed to selecting, they found that he was more apt to select a dark grey in the familiar shape.

Among modern researchers studies seem to have been largely confined to the dog food manufacturers. The Swift Nutritional Research Kennels in Chicago, for example, any artificial coloring. Since this seems pleasing to the human eye, it was presumed that it was also pleasing to the canine eye. But being research men, the staff refused to accept this without experimentation.

So odorless colors were added to the foods and the usual precautions taken to ensure fair testing - positions of food dishes alternated, observations made from a distance, etc.

The result? Well, the dogs just didn't give a hoot so long as the food remained the same and there was no change in odor or taste.
