Ability To See Is Less after Sundown

Darkness can be deceitful for drivers, warns the Motor Vehicles Department. Ability to see is cut sharply after sundown. Many motorists are guilty of "overdriving" their headlights, meaning they could not stop their cars within the distance clearly illuminated by their headlights.

Of 977 fatal traffic accidents on North Carolina highways last year, 453 occurred during hours of darkness, 451 in daylight, 39 at dusk and 21 at dawn.

The roadway or street was not lighted in 578 of the 453 after-dark accidents, the department noted.
