Time to stop

Yes, it is time to stop the wasting away of precious topsoil on farmlands. Why lose income and see land values go down when so many leading farmers have proved—time and again—that proper conservation practices mean more profit. It's often the difference between profit and loss from farming.

Talking about

Mark Twain said, "Everybody talks about the weather, but nobody does anything." But conservation practices like irrigation, strip cropping, contour farming and others can help even out the effect of weather on your crops. Planned waterways and drainage systems also help prevent erosion of crop-producing topsoil.

and Do something

We at C. P. & L. are proud that in the 60-County Finer Carolina area, 1,598 farms totaling 670,422 acres have entered the 1954 "Finer Farms" Contest based on soil and water conservation. Each farmer agreed to start one new conservation practice or expand an existing one. There is still a long way to go before every farm is benefiting from soil conservation.
