High Yield, Disease Free Leaf Varieties Predicted

Black shank resistant varieties of flue-cured tobacco have been grown less than 15 years. During this time the acreage planted in them in North Carolina has increased from several hundred to approximately 150,000, much of this increase in acreage occurring since 1950.

This rapid change in varieties was brought about by the spread of black shank and the development of higher yielding resistant varieties such as Dixie Bright 101, according to E. L. Moore and F. A. Todd, Experiment Station plant pathologists.

High yield and high resistance to black shank have been difficult to combine in a single variety. "As a result, the varieties which will give a farmer the best returns on his diseased acres have only moderate resistance," the pathologists note.

This resistance is satisfactory where disease levels are not high and a carefully planned crop rotation is followed. However, when disease levels build up, or the disease is complicated by the presence of parasitic nematodes, resistant varieties quite often suffer heavy losses.

This appeared to be the case in 1951 when about 10 per cent of the farms on which resistant varieties were planted sustained a 10 to 75 per cent loss.

The time had come to intensify efforts to develop more highly resistant varieties and at the same time keep the yields high. Critical disease levels are necessary to screen out susceptible plants in a breeding program for disease resistance. Therefore, the place to test for higher resistance appeared to be the fields where Dixie Bright 101 had been killed. So, arrangements were made with W. H. Dail.

Tobacco Associates Urge Farmers To Practice On-The-Farm Grading To Improve Foreign Trade Position

Flue-cured tobacco growers would do well to follow the on-the-farm grading practices being stressed by Tobacco Associates and other agricultural leaders in an effort to correct the unfavorable position their tobacco is now being faced with overseas.

This is the generally-held opinion of a group of men who should know—their dealers, who buy for the export trade.

To help keep growers informed on the current complaints being registered by foreign manufacturers, Tobacco Associates representatives, whose job is to promote world markets for flue-cured tobacco, recently called on several leaf dealers for their views.

At the Imperial Tobacco Company in Richmond, Va., buyers for British manufacturers, John R. Hutson, Jr., the company president, said: "There has been much complaint of damaged tobacco from our manu-facturers caused by growers using artificial methods to condition their tobacco for market. It is difficult, if not impossible, to redry tobacco where the butt ends have been dipped in or sprinkled with water or placed in the dew, resulting in the tobacco damaging after being put through the drying machines and packed in hogheads."

The Imperial president said it is not important in the foreign trade or heads of bundled tobacco to be a uniform size—about the size of a half-dollar piece. "It is next to impossible for this Company, as exporters, to redry large bundled wet tobacco in a manner acceptable for our British manufacturers. For this reason, we do not intentionally bid on piles of tobacco in these conditions, and in many in-stances this adversely affects the financial return to the grower."

"Much complaint is made of string in tobacco," Hutson said, adding, "It is a source of much concern, not to mention additional expense, to our manufacturers. Time should be taken to pick out all string and other foreign matter and the tobacco should be free of sand and dirt."

The Imperial official pointed out that there are no complaints of this kind from tobacco produced outside

Drunken Driving Shows Decrease

RALEIGH—Drunken driving and speeding over 70 mph in a passenger car lead the Motor Vehicles Dept.'s monthly summary of violations requiring the surrender of driving privileges.

The Vehicle Agency reported 652 convictions for drunken driving during the month, a decline of 114 from the previous July.

Second offense drunken driving came in with 144 convictions and pending over 70 mph cost 231 motorists their driver's license.

Other violations like reckless driving, driving after license revoked, hit and run, manslaughter—transporting intoxicants, and un-justified judgment brought the total of confiscated licenses to 1,760.
