Of Human Interest

There is an angel in our midst. "The angel of Dien Bien Phu", Lt. Genevieve de Galard-Terraube, arrived in this country last week.

Here is a modern angel. The wings that bore her to our shores are mechanized wings. The white dress she was wearing was no long flowing gossamer garment but a nurse's uniform which hung straight and neat. But she had earned the title of "angel", as have others in her profession, by ministering to the ills of mankind, and by watching over and comforting him in his hour of need.

Here is a latter-day Joan of Arc—not a militant Joan leading men into the Hell of battle but a maternal Joan meeting them as they are borne back therefrom—pain-ridden and bleeding—and transforming a hospital tent into a kind of Heaven with easing skill and comforting medicaments.

Americans are taking the French Air Force nurse to their hearts. They recognize as no ordinary mortal a woman who bravely refused to leave the place where she was desperately needed however dangerous the consequences, and who dismissed her heroism by saying she was only doing her duty. The Congress unanimously voted to issue an invitation to her to visit the United States. She was given a ticker tape welcome in New York City where the Mayor proclaimed her "the heroine of the world".

The arrival of Marie de Galard-Terraube coincided with the signing of a truce in the war in which she served so nobly. And so, for the first time in a decade, peace reigns however precariously, upon our planet.

An angel of mercy—a mortal one—is here. This we know. And we welcome her during her sojourn in our land. But let us hope also that the spiritual presence, the angel of Peace now hovering over our world, can forever remain.

Goodby, Gil

Gilead Blizell is dead. He was preparing his breakfast Tuesday morning when he fell to the floor and mortal life for him was over. We, hereabouts, will miss him.

Gilead was an aging colored man who lived in a little white clapboard house behind Mrs. Dees' home across the street from ours. He made a living mainly by plowing field plots and gardens for the people of our town.

He owned a mule, and a little tobacco cart, on which he used to load his plow and ride to work. The sight and sound of their passing in the morning, at noon, and late in the afternoon were familiar ones.

Gilead was not a saintly man, but his faults were human ones, and therefore, forgivable. Sometimes the cart weaved along the street in zigzag fashion as the faithful mule obeyed the directions of his master's unstable hands. Sometimes Gil was remiss in paying his debts, but he made little token payments on them, unlike some men who contract financial obligations and thereafter ignore them. Perhaps he did not come to break up your garden on the very day you wanted him, but the ground was ready when seedtime came. He was just human, you might say.

And Gil was somebody special to the children. They called his mule a "horse", and his ownership of the animal made a hero of him in their eyes. Gilead's "horse" caused some of the few moments of excitement on our quiet street, when he would break out of his pen and go tearing liketly split across the lawns.

The children often ran and hopped on Gil's cart for a "free ride". They hung around to watch as he harnessed up, and he was patient and let them help. Sometimes he allowed the bigger boys to try their hand at plowing a furrow.

When Gil wasn't working, he'd sit in his doorway. The children would come to play in his small front yard, and they would ask him their incessant questions, which he patiently tried to answer.

Once my two year old wandered out of the yard, and Gil led him home again with great gentleness. "Is this your baby, Ma'am?"

Gil would stand aside deferentially for the mothers who were pushing strollers along the sidewalk, and he'd compliment the babies. "That's a fine baby. Pretty child."

Gilead was generous with his dwelling and his fare. He "took in" the derelicts who had been driven out of their lodgings or had no place to go. Oftentimes they would abuse his hospitality, and the law would have to come in and calm the disturbance. But later Gil would forgive he mand offer asylum once more.

Gilead was an honored man in his church. His people will miss him. So will all the little children who knew him. And so will we. The bump of the cart sounds no longer on week days. And the Sabbath will pass without the sight of the stooped Sunday-dressed figure shuffling churchward.

Carelessness With Poisons Is Dangerous

Carelessness with poisonous materials used in farming may exact a costly toll among livestock, the American Foundation for Animal Health has warned animal owners.

"In fact, the risks may be even greater on well-managed farms because of their greater use of chemical products, as in weed and insect control," says the Foundation.

"For example, cattle readily eat plants treated with sodium chlorate, and the results are often fatal. They will by-pass plants treated with arsenic, but may be poisoned by drinking from puddles in fields recently treated. Various other weed killers are in themselves harmless to animals but may cause chemical changes in plants, which, when eaten, produce ill effects.

Fertilizers containing nitrogen should be placed well out of reach of livestock. So should discarded paint pails, old storage batteries, and other products containing lead. An animal may be poisoned after just a few licks, the Foundation says.

Certain chemical compounds are effective worming agents, but should never be left where animals can get at them. Similarly, salt is vital to animals, but when it becomes a brine it may be toxic to pigs.

"Prompt treatment is the key to saving animals that are poisoned," the Foundation advises. "The veterinarian should be called the moment the first poisoning symptoms are noticed."
