The Life Of Your Pans Depends A Lot On You

Although aluminum is no longer considered a valuable metal, you still can't take your kitchen utensils for granted and get the best use from them.

The life of your aluminum pots and pans depends upon you and how you take care of them, says Mamie Whisnant, State College extension specialist in home management.

Aluminum, though once an expensive metal, is now used perhaps more than any other metal for the manufacture of kitchen equipment. This light-weight metal is popular because of its heat conduction qualities and long-wearing characteristics; however, a little extra precaution will prolong the life of your aluminum utensils considerably, says Miss Whisnant.

When storing left-overs in the refrigerator, transfer the food from its aluminum cooking container into a glass or plastic one. The quicker food is taken out on an aluminum pan, the better.

To wash aluminum utensils, use mild soap and water and wash the pans as soon after using as possible. Leaving food in an aluminum pan may cause pitting—the formation of tiny holes on the surface. Pits not only detract from the appearance of the pan but also makes washing harder.

Alkalis will also cause aluminum to pit, so avoid using soda, lye or other strong washing powders for cleaning aluminum. If your aluminum pans are becoming dingy, boil a slightly acid solution — vinegar and water or cream of tartar and water—to brighten the pan. If the pan is badly discolored, use a very fine abrasive to scour it.

QUESTION: Exactly what is meant by "quality" milk?

ANSWER: Top quality milk should have a clean sweet flavor and odor and contain no off-flavors, it should contain no disease-bearing bacteria and have a low total bacteria count, it should be free from sediment and antibiotics (penicillin, aureomycin, etc.) and conform to local, state, and federal standards.

QUESTION: Does priming burley tobacco pay?

ANSWER: Yes. One priming requires about 75 hours more labor per acre. Two primings require about 100 extra hours. However, one can expect to receive $1.03 to $2.50 per hour for the labor used, depending on the season. Also, cutting is easier and faster after the stalk has been primed.
