LONG-EARED SUNFISH

©1954 National Wildlife Federation

Practically all sunfish are popular with those who do not take their fishing too seriously. They have the gameness one could ask of any fish of similar size. They bite readily, are good to eat and reproduce abundantly. They are hardly where many other fishes could not survive.

There are a number of subspecies of the longear sunfish, in this species the back fin is lower than in the bluegill sunfish or the pumpkin seed with which they might be confused. Possibly the most effective character used in identification is the long black ear flap. In the Great Lakes longear sunfish this flap is conspicuous because of broad red margin at the rear. In the Mississippi longer sunfish the flap is a pale blue border. The former seldom grows to a length of 4 inches while the latter may reach twice that length.

The Great Lakes subspecies ranges from Minnesota through the Great Lakes area to Quebec. The Mississippi longear is found in the Alabama, Mississippi, Ohio and Tennessee rivers and their tributaries. Other subspecies range to the southwest of these areas.

These sunfish favor quieter streams and lakes where there is an abundance of vegetation in which they can find shelter and from which they may collect the insects and other small animals that make up the bulk of their food. They particularly favor insect larvae, worms and small fishes. They may feed abundantly on leeches.

In May or June the male longear sunfish, like all good sunfish, selects a spot in the sun where the water is about 3 feet deep and where the bottom may be of sand or gravel. Here he clears away the vegetation and loose stuff covering the bottom in an area about 2 to 3 times his own length. He drives always an intruding fish and he has fertilized them he may drive her away and proceed to get another mate to repeat the performance with him. In any case the female assumes little responsibility for the family or the family home while the male takes over every responsibility except that of laying the eggs which he obviously cannot do.

The male stays by the nest fanning silt from them and keeping away marauding minnows and other fish which might eat the eggs or young. Eventually the young fish shift for themselves but they may remain in small schools for a considerable time either under the protection of the male or on an independent basis.

All sunfish are interesting either in a pond or stream, in an aquarium or on the end of a line. They take worms for bait most frequently but will take trout flies on occasion. If you happen to be a fisherman who fishes just for the fun of it and not for the purpose of smelting up the frying pan or having a bite to eat, there are few fish that offer more fun than sunfish if they are sought properly. This means fishing for them with artificial baits that are kept moving and then hooks from which the barbs have been removed.

Light tackle and barbless hooks and a spirit of sportsmanship joining a fisherman to his sunfish practically guarantee an interesting outing.

Hurricane Points Need Civil Defense

Wayne, Wilson and Duplin counties are among 31 counties in the Carolina designated by the Small Business Administration as hurricane disaster areas.

The SBA named 27 North Carolina counties and four in South Carolina in taking action making residents of the counties eligible to apply for loans to repair storm-hit homes or business structures.

The disaster area designation stipulates that loans cannot be made for restoration or repair of cottages used only in resort times. A house must have been occupied by its owner on a year-round basis or been rented as a major income producing item by its owner to be eligible for repairs under the SBA loan disaster designation.

Loans will be made by the SBA, which announced that it is setting up a temporary disaster office in the Customhouse in Wilmington.

In addition, disaster loan applications may be filed at the SBA branch office at Charlotte, N. C. and at the regional office at Richmond, Va.

Loans made will carry an interest rate of 3 percent.
