Health For All

The "Angels" invalids—Anyone who has been an invalid or who has cared for one knows that physical illness can seriously affect the personality. Especially during an illness such as tuberculosis which may require months of treatment, the patient's behavior may change so much that he seems a different person. Unfortunately, he does not always become the angelic invalid we read about in novels.

The modern doctor thinks in terms of "psychosomatic medicine." His patient is not a machine with parts that need repair, but a whole human being. He knows that purely physical derangements, such as fever, can cause temporarily disturbed emotions. He knows also that the way a patient feels about his illness may not only keep him from following prescribed treatment, but actually make him worse or cause some new physical upset to complicate the original illness.

Uncertainty about himself, his future, his family is perhaps most difficult for the TB patient to endure. Unless he is reassured by the attitude of the people around him and by learning the facts about his disease, he will have to do this by giving up adult behavior.

He may display childish irritability, tantrums, and unreasonable demands. Other patients may react as submissive, well-behaved children. They may become over-dependent on the doctor and on receiving treatment, and resist any effort to break the bonds. Still others release their anxiety by becoming hostile and aggressive, and try to hurt themselves and others. The type of reaction, of course, depends on the basic and sometimes hidden personality traits the sick person brings to his new situation.

By facing the psychological problems of illness frankly and with sympathetic understanding, the family of the TB patient can make an important contribution to his welfare. Satisfying his mental and emotional needs can be just as important as performing the mechanical tasks of nursing.
