"It adds up to Confidence"—

SAYS A VIRGINIA BANK

When a neighbor refers to your product or service as a symbol of "confidence," you naturally feel pretty good about it. At the risk of tooting our own horn, that's the way we feel about the definition recently published by a Virginia Bank. Here it is:—

"... you flick an electric switch several times a day—many times a year, and take it for granted that electricity will respond and light will be produced immediately. That's dependability through proven use. It adds up to confidence."

We want to thank our neighbor for those kind words. They serve to spur us on to even better service... service which will continue to merit the confidence those words express.
