OUR NINE OLD MEN AND THEIR POWER

The Supreme Court of the United States Tuesday recognized the rights, will and power of the people, when it directed that integration of the races in our schools be left up to the home folks. In effect, it nullified its decision of a year ago when it ordered immediate integration.

John Marshall, our first chief justice, assumed the Supreme Court had a right to declare a law constitutional or not constitutional. There is no provision in our Constitution or Bill of Rights for the Supreme Court to have such executive powers. It provides for an opinion.

In the fight over segregation the Supreme Court gave a so-called executive order and for the first time in history, that I can recall, they have renounced their decision. More power to the people. J.R. Grady

Thompson Encourages People To Build Own Financial Security

A local banker told Warsaw Rotary Club members today that the time-honored adage of "saving for a rainy day" is not obsolete, as so many people seem to think, but is just as necessary for our security as it was in grandfather's day.

"Nothing is more wrong," the speaker declared, "These are all helpful measures, but they are only partial props at best. Real security can come only through personal savings."

The speaker highly recommended the automatic, systematic method of buying savings bonds.

Meanwhile, the accumulated bond holdings which millions of Americans have to fall back on in adverse times, help to cushion and check any decline.

"We all believe in America, and savings bonds are a part of America. When you buy a bond, you buy an interest in your country. When you hold a bond, you keep faith with America. I hope you will join with me in buying and holding savings bonds - shares in the future of America - for I know that all of you believe that we are on the high road to that brighter future."

At Seven Springs Andrew Price Still Sharpens Saws

Time has been when the saw sharpening business was an establishment in each community. However, with the coming of modern conveniences for wood cutting, the saw sharpening business has taken a back seat.

But, there are still a few such "saw sharpeners" around. Andrew Price, of Seven Springs has been at the trade for about eight years.

When Hurricane Hazel came through last October 15, Andrew knew he was in for plenty of work. The old fashioned cross-cut saw made its appearance in numbers. It seemed to him that almost everyone wanted him to sharpen a cross-cut during the winter months.

Why I Am Proud Of My Heritage

Editor's Note: The following essay was the prize winning essay written by Bobby Lanier in the Duplin County Daughter's of American Revolution annual contest.

Have you ever stood by a broad and mighty river? Somewhere, maybe hundreds of miles away, it began at a tiny stream. Then it slowly became deeper and broader as little brooks or creeks joined it. Many of these little streams make the riv-

Nature, plants, animals, men, and women helped it to grow slowly as the years passed. Homes, governments, churches, bridges, ships, schools, railroads, factories, cities, libraries, millions of men, and women and children, of different lands, a few great leaders, and a thousand other blessings have come through the years to make the South grow larger and its life become fuller and richer. Since the South first began, Southern fathers and mothers have worked, struggled, and a thousand and then their children have taken up their tasks.

It is not only in the East that the Southern spirit lives. The Southern spirit lives in the West. The Southern spirit lives in the North. The Southern spirit lives in the South. The Southern spirit lives in every part of our country. The Southern spirit lives in every man and woman who is proud of his or her heritage.

Mrs. Joe Jones and Mr. James Strickland, chaperones, conducted the Warsaw High School seniors of Warsaw, on a four day class tour that included such points of interest as: Washington, D. C. and Luray Caverns, Virginia.

Luray Caverns is a creation of nature that has been in the process of formation for more than 10,000,000 years, so scientists state. The Palace of Splendors in which the students are shown is many times larger than the average home, and is only one of numerous rooms featured on the one and three quarter mile cave tour.

T. B. CORNER BY MARY TAYLOR Executive Secretary

Last week we sort of introduced the TB Corner and told you about our officers and that the purpose of the association is for the dual purpose of keeping the public well informed about Tuberculosis and to secure their funds through the Seal Sales in order to finance the undertaking.

It is a wonderful organization in that it gives us the privilege to help fight TB—a disease that can strike any of us at any time but that can be checked to a certain extent by early case findings—early case findings are a result of health education which is a part of our program.

After becoming a member of the association you may become a bonded member. We are proud to have our corner at the present time Dr. Colwell of Wallace, Ruby Kormeay of Warsaw, Annie Mae Kenan of Warsaw, Lewis Outlaw of Alberton and G. E. Alphin, Jr. of Kenansville.

Tuesday night, Chief Deputy W. D. Boone arrested Mr. and Mrs. Otis Rogers, Negroes, of Wallace, for possession of non-tax paid whiskey for the purpose of sale.

A COOL HOG IS A LIVE HOG

Keep hogs cool . . . at home and on the way to market. At market, provide shade and fresh water at all times. On the way to market, provide shade and fresh water at all times. On the way to market, provide shade and fresh water at all times.

Hot weather is mighty rough on today's hogs unless steps are taken to keep them cool—cool on the farm and especially on the way to market. Hogs are strictly temperate animals when it comes to temperature, and since man has bred them to reach market weight in a limited length of time it's up to man to help overcome these unnatural handicaps.

Shade, cool water, fresh air and a cool place to lie down have to be provided by their owners and transporters.

The sweeter of today's hog was a good forager, lean of limb and fleet of foot. He was no stranger to the cool, dark recesses of the country's virgin forests and his footsteps beat a path to the nearest water hole.

That is true no longer. Today his feed awaits him in well-filled self feeders. He's too busy putting on weight to go rooting for it. Fresh water and clean place to lie down in the shade are just as vital, as his feed supply.

And when it comes time for today's hog to go to market he has to have first class accommodations. You can't pack him in a truck or a rail car like humans in a subway train at rush hour. He has to have non-skid bedding . . . sand is best of all . . . and that sand should be wet down frequently in hot weather. He has to have ventilation because of all market animals, the hog has the smallest lung capacity for his weight. Since he doesn't sweat, occasionally sprinkling him with cool water and wetting the bedding on the trip to market is good insurance for his safe arrival.

When Hurricane Hazel came through last October 15, Andrew knew he was in for plenty of work. The old fashioned cross-cut saw made its appearance in numbers. It seemed to him that almost everyone wanted him to sharpen a cross-cut during the winter months.

"It may sound silly," he informs, "but I could tell just as good when we were going to have a real cold day last winter. If five or six farmers came in with saws for me to sharpen, it would be mighty cold the next day."

He indicates that winter months are when he has the most business. Some farmers still use wood to shove saws, soak with and provide heat. This is the reason for the winter
