He had his ups and downs in English Cauthout he was too independent of court favor in a day when "mere musicians" were looked down upon. In 1731 Handel received from Charles Jenneus selected words of Scripture which were to be the basis of the "Meaniah."

In August of that year he wrote the whole oratorio, putting it on paper in 24 days. He did not leave his house during that time.

His biography tells us that when head completed Part II with the "Hallelujah Chorus," his servant found him at his writing table, tears streaming-from his eyes.

When The Messiah" was first given in London, King George II attended, He was so moved by the "Hallelujah Chorus" that he rose to his feet and remained standing until the last chords had died away.

The audience rose with the king starting a custom, that has remained for two centuries in England and Americs.

No finer tribute could be paid "The Messiah" than that by the critic, Rafael Kammerer, who on the occasion of the works bicentennial in 1942 remarked: "In the two hundred years that have come and gone since "The Messiah" first brought tears to the eyes of it's creator and fi'led with him with visions of Hea-
