

Christmas Tragedy In Kenansville Is Avoided By Pair Of 'Burning Eyes'

A Christmas tragedy was avoided in Kenansville Saturday morning by a pair of "burning eyes."
Only because of "burning eyes" caused by carbon monoxide fumes from the lives of three Kenansville citizens saved.
Thomas Jones, Negro employee at Ralph Brown's Garage, "passed out" twice Saturday morning after inhaling carbon monoxide fumes from the Kenansville fire truck.
The incident occurred Saturday morning in Brown's garage while Donald and James Murphy, white, and Jones were working in the garage while the motor of the fire truck was running.
Harry Murphy, member of the fire department and brother of the two Murphy brothers, said the fire truck is but in the garage at Brown's during cold winter nights. This is done to keep the fire hose and nozzles from freezing.
"Too, each morning the fire truck's motor is started in order to make sure the battery is strong and to also charge the battery. It would be bad if we did not have the battery charged when we were called on to go to a fire," Harry advised.
"This is the reason the motor was running in the closed garage. Cold weather had forced the three to keep the door to the garage closed and with the motor running carbon monoxide fumes built up in the garage.

The first indication of the poisoning fumes being in the building was when the eyes of James Murphy began "burning."
He went over, turned off the motor to the fire truck, and opened the door to the garage. As soon as the fresh air was inhaled by Jones, he dropped to the floor. About one minute later he was revived and was thought to be "all right."
He left the station and went across the street to the B and M Esso and asked for the keys to the restroom.
Harry was gone and had carried the keys with him. As Jones left the service station, he fell in the street. He was rushed to Duplin General Hospital, where he was revived by giving him oxygen.
Dr. Robert F. Willis kept him in the hospital until after lunch. In the afternoon, Donald Murphy had a very bad headache and had to go to the hospital where he was also given oxygen.
Yes, had it not been for the "burning eyes" of James Murphy, three of Kenansville's citizens might, probably, would be dead this Christmas.

Christmas In Switzerland Celebrated Twice; Not As Commercial As In U. S.

EDITOR'S NOTE: Miss Davis from the Moss Hill section has recently returned from Switzerland where she stayed for four months as a 4-H Club Exchange Student. We requested her to write an account of what Christmas would be like in Switzerland. The following is a short story on "Christmas in Switzerland," — Paul Barwick.

BY MISS SUZANNE DAVIS
If I had been in Switzerland the night of December 8, I wonder if the spirit of Saint Nicolas (Santa Claus) would have left me a ginger breadman or witch.
For Saint Nicolas comes on December 6, to visit all the children in that Alpine country. To the good little girls and boys he brings a gingerbread and for the bad ones he leaves switches. I'm not sure if Swiss girls and boys hang up their stockings for Saint Nicolas to leave his gifts in or not, "cause I forgot to ask the English speaking Swiss who was explaining Swiss Christmas to me.
Saint Nicolas, as I understand it, doesn't make a spectacular entrance into every Swiss town, but quietly comes over the snow to visit. The description of Swiss Christmas did not sound nearly as commercialized as our American Christmas seasons are beginning to be.
If I were in Switzerland now I would probably be getting my presents ready for my family and friends, for we would exchange presents just like any American family on December 25. For my Daddy I might have a carved blotter holder or cow bells, while for Mother I would embroider a lampshade, or tobacco tin. I might even knit a pair of socks or a sweater for my brother (if I were in Switzerland). There would be Christmas trees just like American ones, complete with decorations and lights.
For Christmas caroling the traditional carols are sung with the singers using German, French or maybe Italian versions depending upon which section of Switzerland they were from. The northern part of this small country speaks German while Italian and French are spoken in the two southern parts. I won't be in Switzerland for a Swiss Christmas because my four months visit there ended the last of October but I was able to learn something about their celebration of Christ's Birthday.

As a member of the International Farm Youth Exchange, I realized the importance of friendships across the barriers of nationalities and languages. Season's greetings from the Swiss—Frohe Weihnachten, or Merry Christmas!

Today, Thursday, is the shortest day in the year and the first day of winter. As we write on Wednesday night in the same spot it registered a low of 16 degrees on Tuesday night of this week, last Saturday afternoon it went up in the low 50s.

These negligent farmers compared with the 163,879 tobacco and peanut farmers in the state are "just a drop in the bucket," he said. However, failure to return their cards definitely hurts the farmers whose allotments are reduced and it also slows up the work in the county ASC office considerably.

Negro Farmers Hear Specialists

The Annual Tobacco meeting for Negro farmers was held in the auditorium of the Agricultural Building, R. R. Bennett, Tobacco Specialist for the N. C. Extension Service discussed the variety situation, plant production, sucker control, fertilization and other phases of tobacco production. Dr. Scott, Entomologist for the North Carolina Extension Service pointed out the changes that are being made in the insect recommendations for 1956.
Bennett stressed that any year too much of any one variety is planted were apt to have trouble, adding that no one variety will meet all of the market demands. Bennett was referring to the high percentage of growers that planted their entire crops to 139 last year. The assembled farmers showed high interest in the new variety D. B. 244. Bennett then cautioned farmers against going to the extreme in planting 244, and suggested those that could grow non-resistant varieties to do so. The meeting was held in the Agricultural Building in Kenansville.

'Pale And Slick' Tobaccos Discounted In USDA 1956 Flue Cured Support

The U. S. Department of Agriculture announced today that in its price support program for 1956—crop flue-cured tobacco it plans to discount any "pale and slick" tobacco that may be offered for loan. The proposed action is being announced at this time, in advance of announcement of the 1956 price support program for flue-cured tobacco, in order to forewarn growers who will soon be purchasing seed, planting seed beds, signing tenant agreements and making other preparations for their 1956 crop.
The discount proposed for "pale and slick" tobaccos under the 1956 price support program for flue-cured tobacco would be such as to set the loan rate for tobaccos with these characteristics at a level reflecting their relative value in the market. Currently, the market value of "pale and slick" flue-cured tobacco is 20 per cent or more below that for similar qualities free of these undesirable characteristics. Department officials stated that the need for the proposed action arises from the fact that the quantity of "pale and slick" tobacco entering the flue-cured market rose significantly with the 1955 crop. Prior to this year the quantity entering the market was not appreciable, and the quantity entering CCC loan stocks was not sufficient to warrant segregation from other stocks.
With the rapid increase this year in the quantity of "pale and slick" tobacco offered, the Department plans to designate tobacco with these characteristics by an appropriate grade symbol in 1956, thus making the loan discount practicable.
The Department makes price supports available through loans to the Flue-Cured Tobacco Cooperative Stabilization Corporation, Raleigh, N. C., operating under contractual arrangements with CCC.

Loss Of Tobacco Acreage If Card Not Returned

Tobacco and peanut farmers are required by law to return their marketing cards to the local ASC office at the close of the marketing season.
H. D. Godfrey, administrative officer for the ASC State Committee, says that farmers who neglect to return their marketing cards will have their 1955 allotments reduced. Last year, according to Godfrey, 295 producers in the State had their 1955 allotments reduced for failure to return marketing cards and other violations.
These negligent farmers compared with the 163,879 tobacco and peanut farmers in the state are "just a drop in the bucket," he said. However, failure to return their cards definitely hurts the farmers whose allotments are reduced and it also slows up the work in the county ASC office considerably.
Godfrey says that regulations provide that the producer must return to the county ASC office each tobacco or peanut marketing card issued for the farm within 30 days after the close of the marketing season in the locality. Many farmers, he said, are still putting off returning the tobacco and peanut marketing cards.
Flue-cured tobacco farmers, with a 5 per cent acreage cut last year, and another cut in acreage next year, should not take a chance on losing more acreage for mere carelessness.

Parrott, Parakeet Fever Spreading In North Carolina

Parrot fever, or parrot fever, is a natural disease of birds that is transmissible to man. Health officials in this state are becoming increasingly alarmed by the continuing spread of the disease. The end of restrictions of interstate bird traffic about five years ago.
Parrot and parakeet fever is a virus infection that has symptoms in man of headache, chills, fever, backache, weakness, cough and other respiratory ailments. Both infection can result from inhalation of dust contaminated with infective particles from dried fecal droppings, urine, feathers and droplets from the nasal secretions of the infected bird. More human parrot fever occurs in winter months when members of a household are exposed in closed houses to infected parakeets kept in cages.
The disease is extremely difficult to control since many birds are carriers of the disease but not having any of the symptoms. Birds that are sick may however appear healthy, motionless, have ruffled feathers, shiver with closed eyes, and may have diarrhea. The best control of the disease is that the public be educated to the dangers of keeping parrots or parakeets in their homes. It is hoped that breeders, bird dealers and breeders will combine to effect a system of certification that will insure the public of receiving only birds that are disease-free. But there has been an increase of birds brought into this country illegally and which have undoubtedly been responsible for the infection of many humans as well as the birds in clean aviaries.
"It shall be the duty of every person having custody or care of any birds of the psittacine (parrot) family to notify the N. C. State Board of Health immediately regarding any unusual illness or death among such birds."
For any further information about this disease, you may contact your local health department or the N. C. State Board of Health.
