Christians Band Together in World Day of Prayer

"One Flock, One Shepherd" is the theme adopted by millions of Christian women around the world, who will be celebrating the World Day of Prayer Friday. From the rising of the sun to its setting on February 17, Christian women will be meeting in prayer under trees, in cathedrals, in thatched-roof huts and in simple churches, all using the same program World Day of Prayer services start out in the Pacific on Tonga Island, when Queen Salote will lead her subjects in prayer. As the day progresses, 134 countries around the world and thousands of Christians in America will be beginning their services.

The last group of women to observe the day are 40 patients in the Seaward Sanatorium on St. Lawrence Island, Alaska.

A day of prayer begun by a small group of women 70 years ago has grown and grown until today it is marked by services around the globe dedicated to world peace and understanding.

In 1837 the United Church Women, a general department of the National Council of Churches, accepted the responsibility for planning and promoting the services. The program for Day of Prayer services is authorized each year by one of the 134 cooperating countries. This seventieth year is marked by a service written by American Indian leaders from Cook Training School in Phoenix, Ariz. With the theme, "One Flock, One Shepherd," it portrays in picturesque language that of a people living close to nature. With Christians praying together that single day, a oneness that alone can bring peace is created.

Beyond the purpose of spiritual fellowship, the second purpose of the World Day of Prayer is the desire to work and help others. This expresses itself in an offering, poured out on behalf of many needs.
