PURINA grows big pullets, gets lots of big eggs

Here's why you can expect an extra basket of eggs per week from each 100 hens compared to U.S. Average.

How'd you like to get an extra basket of eggs per week this fall from each 100 layers? That's what a nationwide survey indicates you can expect if you feed your pullets on a Purina Growing plan. And remember, that's during the fall and early winter when prices are usually most favorable.

Records from 1,083 farmers showed that each hundred pullets grown out on a Purina feeding program laid nearly 20 dozen extra eggs per week over the U. S. Average flocks during the four fall months—September to December.

Feed Growers in the new feed-saving Bitesize chackers. Or, if you have grain, your Purina Dealer can show you how to feed a ration that's largely your own grain—with just enough Purina to make pullets grow right.
