Cedar Fork Development Committee Proves Valuable To Its Citizens

From a meeting in Dewey Lanier's packhouse last October 26, ideas were born but not forgotten. Although the Cedar Fork Community Development Club in Duplin County is young in age it has already tasted the sweet fruit of accomplishment through its own efforts and labors.

At their first meeting 40 interested people met with Vernon Reynolds, Jim Young and Jim Bunce of the Duplin County Agricultural Extension Staff.

The second meeting was attended by 80 interested people. The third meeting held at a community church was attended by 100 people.

Extension Community Development Specialist Julian A. Glazener of State College is advisor to the group. Glazener came to State College a year ago after serving many years in Transylvania County as agriculture teacher and county farm agent.

Farmers down in the Cedar Fork community of Duplin County mean to find out what their good earth can do.

Ninety per cent of the farmers in the community have sent soil samples to the North Carolina Department of Agriculture for analysis. This is one of the most fruitful efforts undertaken so far in community progress. The chairman of the five roads in the community say their goal is 100 per cent participation, and that it is going to be that way if they have to take soil samples themselves. A soils specialist has already briefed farmers of the importance of soil tests at one of their meetings. George Cowan is President of the Community Development Club. He is assisted by a committee on each road in the community.

In addition to taking soil samples, another community improvement project underway is the installation of new mail boxes or the improvement of old ones.

An old filling station was an eyesore for many years in the community but has been torn down.

Four farm homes have been repaired or repaired.

Cedar Fork farmers are not going to let the tobacco cut get them down. They are already entering the watermelon and face lifting the

Kenansville Steps Up Program To Fight Polio Through March Of Dimes

JAYCEE ROAD BLOCK AND YOUTH'S MARCH AGAINST POLIO SCHEDULED FOR FRIDAY

In an effort to give all the citizens of Kenansville an opportunity to enroll in the 1957 March of Dimes, the local Jay Cees, who have done so much for the betterment of Kenansville will sponsor a road block and ask motorists to aid in the fight against polio.

Efforts to wipe out this dreaded disease must continue. Science has made great progress in the prevention of this disease. However, we must not let up. We must continue in the fight to free our youth from this dreaded disease.

And what about those who are already victims of this crippling? Can we forget about them? Of course not. Their only hope for recovery rests upon a continuation of the March of Dimes. When you are asked to enroll in this cause, please do so. If you have done so, please do so again. Your contribution can mean the difference between sickness and health for some child; maybe even for yourself.

He is a graduate of William Carey college, Hattiesburg, Miss., and is now studying for the Bachelor of Divinity degree at Southeastern Seminary, Wake Forest.

The new pastor, his wife and three-month-old daughter, Rebecca Lynn, moved into the parsonage late last month after accepting the call to the circuit December 7. The charge is composed of the Garner's Chapel, Alum Springs, and Jones Chapel churches.

Mrs. Hathorn also is a native of Bogalusa, Miss. She attended Pearl River Junior college at Poplarville, Miss., and William Carey College.

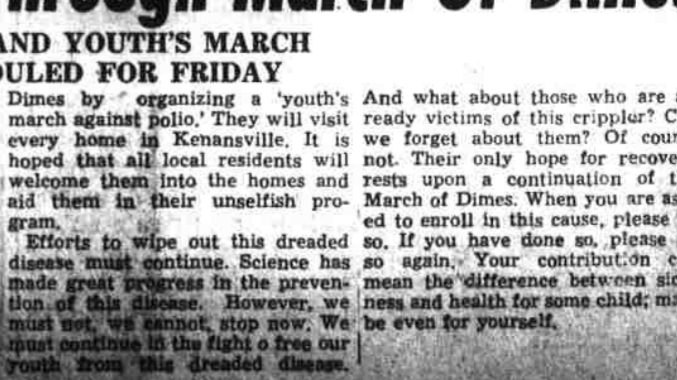

The circuit has been without a pastor for several months following the resignation of the Rev. Eugene Hager.
