VA Announces Some Changes In Claims Allowed

Veterans Administration announced a new pilot study now is underway to review veterans' claims that were disallowed after World War II.

Summer G. Whittier, Administrator of Veterans Affairs, said the pilot study is the converse of the current review of compensation and pension claims that were allowed over the same period.

Mr. Whittier said the pilot study is being conducted in the VA regional offices at Columbia, S. C.; Brooklyn, N. Y.; Milwaukee, Wis.; Togus, Me.; Wichita, Kans.; Seattle, Wash.; and Lubbock Tex.

Through this study, VA will come up with one of three conclusions:

1. A review of disallowed claims would not be worth the effort; or,
2. A further extension of the pilot study would be in order; or,
3. A full-scale nation-wide review of disallowed claims is necessary.

Mr. Whittier ordered the pilot study at the request of veterans.

Linotyping Course Offered At Chowan

Murfreesboro, N. C. — A six week course in Linotyping operation maintenance, Teletypewriter operation, and Teletypewriter operating unit monitoring will be offered at the Roy Parker School of Printing at Chowan College June 2 to July 11.

The Linotype course is planned primarily for those who have had printing experience, according to John McSweeney, director of the School of Printing, but high school graduates with good academic records will be considered.

Applicants for the Teletypewriter operator course must have a typing speed of 50 words a minute to be accepted. This course is open to both men and women.

Application are now being accepted, McSweeney said, with registration closing May 28. The cost of the course is $150.00 including room.

Prison Guard From Faison Is Fired

H. W. King of Faison, route 1, was one of three prison guards fired in Raleigh last week for allegedly participating in a plot to help five prisoners escape.

King became a guard at the prison on December 24, 1956.

According to the Raleigh News and Observer, a $15,000 bribe that never paid figured prominently in the breakout plot.

THIS WEEK — In Washington

With Clinton Davidson

The hardest man in Washington discourages is, without doubt, Secretary of Agriculture Ezra Taft Benson. A week seldom passes that he does not reject demands that he resign.

If harsh criticism—and he has had an abundance of it—gets under his skin he shows no sign of it. Eggs and verbal brick-bats have rained down on him for more than five years.

Since January, 1953, he has spent almost $20 billion on programs authorized by Congress to help farmers. Yet poll after poll has shown that most farmers want him to quit.

Benson, himself, disputes these polls. He would rather rely on the mail he receives which, he says, runs more than three to one in favor of his staying. How many of those are from farmers he doesn't say.

The Congressional Record has printed more than 100 speeches by congressmen demanding that Benson resign. At least a dozen delegations from Congress have faced the Secretary and insisted that he get out.

Recently one such delegation told him that if he didn't go soon he would cause 25 to 30 Midwestern Republican congressmen to be defeated in November. Benson told them, in effect, that he didn't believe it.

Some of those most active in the "dump Benson" campaign claim that Vice-President Nixon is one of their leaders. Nixon, however, has neither confirmed nor denied the reports. Benson says they are not true.

In the Senate and House Agriculture Committees, where farm legislation must originate, Republican and Democratic members have been almost equally critical of Benson and his farm policies. They've made life miserable for him in the hope that he would quit.

The attitude of the farm organization leaders in Washington has ranged from lukewarm to openly hostile. Generally, the Farm Bureau has been less critical than the others.

Benson, on the other hand, is not without staunch supporters. Most important of those is President Dwight D. Eisenhower. He not only refuses to ask Benson to resign, but publicly endorses his farm policies and insists that he stay.

For almost every speech in Congress demanding that Benson resign, there has been another praising him. Principally, these have been made by congressmen from Northeastern states and from predominantly urban districts, but he also has supporters from farm states.

The enigma of it all is that Benson is generally well liked, personally. He is respected for his unshakable devotion to his convictions. A deeply religious man, he simply turns the other cheek to his assailants.

He has said repeatedly that he does not seek personal popularity. The fact that his program does not appeal to many farmers, or to Congress, does not discourage him. Only one thing counts: His firm conviction that what he stands for is right and in the long-time best interest of farmers and the nation.
