It Begins at Home Lesson for July 20, 1936

JUSTICE, like charity, begins at home. People who don't practice it there are not likely to practice it anywhere. A home is often called a "stronghold" a place where one can get away. But the home is no place to get away from the human race, no place to get away from God, no place to get away from duty. In one sense the home is the easiest place to live. When some one wants to express the idea of a delightful situation he will say it is like "one big happy family." On the other hand the home is a very difficult place to live, just because those who make it up are so very different. Anywhere else in the world, for instance, a man has other men he can team up with; but in the home father is the only man. He has only a woman and children for company. They love him and he loves them; but they are all so different that they are hard to understand.

Justice in the Home It is hard to comprehend the meaning of "social justice" in society at large. The whole thing is so complex and enormous that we seldom feel certain of the answers. But when we look at a single home, the problem is in some ways clearer. For example: The home makes it plain that "justice" is not the same thing as treating every one precisely alike. A good diet for mother may be a poor one for father, and what both of them eat may be poison for the baby. Father, mother and child have different parts to play in the home; they have different contributions to make, they need from the home different benefits. The Bible at many points deals with the home, and if what is said sounds too simple and common-sense for inspired Scripture, we must believe that the home itself, which we take for granted, is itself a product of the inspiration of the Bible. One thing the Bible makes plain is of the essence of justice: rights and responsibilities go together. The father and the mother have responsibilities which the support, they have a right to teach.

The Teaching Mother No one will try to make light of a mother's willing sacrifice in bringing a child into the world. But if all a woman does for her children is to give them birth she is not the Bible's idea of a good mother. A woman who has a child who, because of her neglect, is only a future thief or killer, might better not have had the child at all. The Bible (as in Proverbs) often brings out directly or indirectly the importance of a good mother in a child's life. And the thing often mentioned is her service as teacher. She is the principal teacher—or she can be, if she gives her time and mind to it—of her child for his first six years. What has all this to do with "justice"? This much, at least: One important feature of justice, in society or in the family, is giving each person an opportunity to render all the service of which he is capable. Hence if mothers are going to be good teachers, we must see how important the education of girls is. Educate a boy and you educate a future man. Educate a girl and you educate a future family. If mothers are to be teachers, then justice requires that everyone, husband and country alike, give to them every encouragement and opportunity to live with their children.

The Children In the Bible's teaching about the home, one feature is stressed which is not at all popular today, though our country would be better off if it were more popular; namely the idea of obedience. What is the best contribution a child can make to the well-being of a home? Two things every child can bring: Cheerfulness, and obedience. And what has this to do with justice? It should be obvious: Justice does not require that everybody in a given group or situation should be the equal of everybody else there. There is such a thing as subordination which is fair and right. Justice in the home does not call for children to be treated like grownups. There is no conflict whatever between love and obedience; indeed the best obedience is the obedience of love. FOR COLLEGE GROWTH, ADVANCEMENT Scholarships Are All Important Today

(2) direct loans, and (3) self-help or work scholarships. M. L. Johnson, treasurer and business manager of the college in charge of scholarships, point out that of the 70 students who have already registered to attend Mount Olive next year, 34 have already made applications for self-help scholarships. This has been somewhat the same trend as recorded since its establishment in 1924 when only 42 students were enrolled. The same was true last year when 102 students were in classes. Johnson looks to the financial statement and points out that the college has put out $4,000 in money this year on loan, "and that is all we had."

In other words, the progress and growth of any college is dependent a great deal on the amount of scholarship funds which are available to help boys and girls continue their education in college who do not have necessary financial backing. Mount Olive College's loan program is set up in such a manner that a student does not have to pay any interest on the money borrowed until after one year after completing his or her education beyond the Junior college level, then the interest period is one year after the additional education is completed. Work scholarships (self-help) amount to $4,937.50 during the 1935-36 school year. This work includes kitchen assistance, library work, serving as lab assistant to instructor's, and anything in the line of work which a student can do for the benefit of the college. Presidential Scholarship amount to $1,900. These are the ones made to Valedictorians and Salutatorians. Mount Olive Junior College is a Free Will Baptist supported institution but is not restricted to enrollment of students within its faith. An example of what the church has done to enhance the scholarship program is seen in an example of a student which came from Middlesex Free Will Baptist orphanage. He completed high school with good grades. He wanted to continue his education and received a self-help scholarship as Mount Olive College.

His home church is providing a loan scholarship to help him with the remaining expenses. He works during the summer, outside the college structure, to help pay as much of the expense as possible. He is a student who is dependent entirely on this assistance for the furtherance of his education. In order to improve this scholarship program, President Raper is visiting all the Southeastern United States Free Will Baptist Conventions and urging their support. This summer he is truly a "Man on the Go." President Raper is seeking this scholarship program's fullest extent to enable the college to grow more rapidly. The college has been approved for accreditation this year and is operating under the observation of the North Carolina College Conference. "I feel confident we will receive our full accreditation this year," he said. "This is another reason why I want this scholarship fund to be in full swing and as large as possible in as short a time as possible." So, as another school year approaches and more students want and need scholarships, Mount Olive Junior College, the youngest in North Carolina, is struggling to establish more scholarships in order that the "baby in education" will not falter.

One of the major program of the college, despite the fact that it is the youngest college in North Carolina. By M. E. Gardner Two weeks ago I discussed fertilizer, the major elements in a complete fertilizer, and gave some information on the minor elements. Now a neighbor asks a question about cotton seed meal, which also brings up the question concerning other similar materials. Frequently used as fertilizers around the home. Since we are primarily interested in the percentage of nitrogen (N) phosphorous (P) and potash (K) in these materials, let's see what we can find out. I will name the material and give the analysis: Cotton seed meal 57 N, 2.5 P, 1.5 K; peanut meal 7.2 N, 1.5 P, 1.2 K; peanut hull meal 1.2 N, 0.5 P, 0.8K; soybean meal 7.1 N, 1.2 P, 1.5 K; to bacco stems (ground) 1.5 N, 0.5 P, 5.0 K; bone meal, approximately 3 N, 25 P, 0.0 K. It will be noted that each material contains varying percentages of the major elements but none is in very good balance. This is especially true of bone meal. These materials may be used but you can readily see that the nutrient balance is not as good as in our 3-5-5 or 10-10-10 mixture.
