STEAM-ELECTRIC POWER, 1903-58—Carolina Power & Light Company's modern Louis V. Sutton plant at Wilmington (top) is a far cry from the unit installed in 1902-03 to serve the port city. The early version (lower photo) was hailed as the first steam turbine south of the Mason-Dixon line and generated 535 horsepower. The newer plant generates 300,000 horsepower. Steam is rapidly outdistancing water power in generating electricity.
