Rate Of Conservation Reserve Is Up $6 Over Previous Years For 1959

North Carolina's basic rate for annual rental payments under the Soil Bank's 1959 Conservation Reserve program has been set at $16,000 per acre, according to Zeno O. Ratcliff, Jr., chairman of the State ASC committee.

For previous years the State's basic annual payment rate was $10,000 per acre.

Average annual payment rates for North Carolina Counties, based on the 1959 State rate, will be announced later. These county rates will vary according to the land productivity, rental value, and the fixed costs farmers will have to meet to comply with the program. Individual farm rates within a county will vary along the same lines, except that no farm rate may exceed 20 per cent of the value of the land in the farm.

The 1959 Conservation Reserve Program includes additional incentives for farmers to "reserve" all the eligible land on their farms for at least five years and a priority system for accepting Conservation Reserve contract applications. "Eligible land", in general, is cropland which is regularly used for cultivated crops or tame hay.

As in former years, two types of payment will be made under the program - a cost-share payment for carrying out a conservation practice on the "reserved" land and annual rental payments during the life of the contract. The Conservation Reserve is being opened early this year since the other phase of the Soil Bank - the Acreage Reserve - will not be in effect in 1959. While a definite opening date has not been announced for the program sign-up, it is expected to start early in October.

Plowing Out Tobacco Roots or Stubbles Immediately After Harvest Encouraging

Tobacco harvesting has been completed and it is encouraging to see that a large number of farmers are plowing out the tobacco roots or stubbles immediately after harvest. Nematodes can be reduced considerably by this practice. It prevents further build up because the nematodes cannot feed or reproduce after the roots are destroyed. Also, a large number of nematodes are trapped in the root system and quite a few are exposed in the soil that is turned up with the tobacco stubble. These nematodes are killed by the drying action of the sun and wind.

The plowing out of the tobacco stubbles alone does not reduce the nematode population low enough to give adequate control but adds to the other control methods such as crop rotation and soil fumigation. Indications are that more emphasis can probably best be placed on crop rotation and the plowing out of the tobacco roots after harvest, and less on soil fumigation.

The job of turning out tobacco stubbles is a simple one. Any method can be used that will get the roots out of the soil so they will be exposed to the drying action of the sun and wind.

The first step is to do a thorough job of cutting the stalks.

Follow this operation immediately with a turning plow, or large middle-butter. A turning plow has been found to be one of the pieces of equipment for this job. A large middle-butter. A turning plow has set will also do a good job. However, regardless of whether a turning plow or a middle buster type plow is used, be careful and don't cover up the roots from the preceding row. Remember if the stubble is not exposed to the drying action of the sun and wind, the job is not complete.

A fair to good job of exposing

Mis Amigos

Last November the two Colombian home agents in the state of Florida and I gave three days training to the nurses in the school of public health here in Bogota. This included an explanation of Point Four Programs, the Agriculture programs and the 4-H clubs, classes in sewing, food preparation, home improvement, furniture making, home gardens and visual aids. The nurses graduated the first of the year and were sent to the state in which we work to set up pilot projects in Public Health. Since they know about our program they soon contacted the extension office and they had had wonderful cooperation and have sponsored joint programs. When some of them needed a manikin to use for demonstration in the care of the sick and did not have the money to buy one, they used some of the training we had given them. From all cloth they cut a life size body and sewed it up. This was stuffed with cotton so the arms and legs could bend. What to use for the head was a problem till they remembered we had taught them to make puppets from

Caribbean Trip

Mrs. Tee Helm and Alois Hollingsworth, son and daughter of Mr. & Mrs. R. E. Hollingsworth of Kenansville, returned last week from one of the most colorful holiday vacation trips available on the East Coast, a Caribbean trip by air to Havana, Cuba and Nassau, Bahamas. Tee and Alois spent two days and two nights in both cities. While in Havana they stayed at the new and ultra-modern Habana Hilton Hotel, and in Nassau they stayed at the famous British Colonial Hotel.

Sightseeing and tours were arranged by the American Automobile Association (AAA).

On their return trip through Miami, Florida, Tee and Alois spent a day and night with Mr. and Mrs. Jack Neilson (Mrs. Neilson is the former Sarah Pickett Bland).

After a few days here in Kenansville, Mrs. Tee Helm will return to her home in Greenville, N. C. and Mr. Alois Hollingsworth will return home in San Antonio, Texas.
