Approximately 28 per cent of the dairy cows in North Carolina were artificially inseminated in 1935.
Farmers can kill two birds with one stone by applying nitrogen side dressing and a weed control at the same time. Experts estimate that with the technology now available the average per acre yield of cotton in North Carolina can be double-justice, goodness, and brotherhood.

Milk cows will consume 200 to 350 pounds of green grass daily when the supply and quality are maintained. This intake supports daily production levels of 40 to 60 pounds of milk, according to Purdue University scientists.
