MEETING OF MODERN MINUTEMEN - Lewis Outlaw of route 1, Albertson, president of Tri-County Electric Membership Corporation, and J. C. Brown of Raleigh, editor of the Tarheel Electric Membership Association's Carolina Farmer magazine at Tri-County's minuteman meeting last Friday night. Mr. Outlaw presided over the meeting and J. C. Brown was guest speaker. Other speakers were Herbert Hulse, attorney for the corporation, and John Kershaw, general manager. The minutemen are co-op members and other individuals who are pledged to support the cooperative "against the attacks of those who would destroy the co-op for selfish purposes." Some 50 Tri-County minutemen present at the called meeting were likened to the original minutemen in history, and were urged to "defend their success" as owners and operators of their rural electric enterprise. The Eisenhower administration's proposal to hike the REA interest rate was repudiated. "The electric co-ops are too popular to be destroyed by frontal attack," declared J. C. Brown, adding: "Get 'em by raising the interest rate is the plan of the administration."

Tri-County Officers Nominated Electric Co-op Officials Says Proposed Hike In REA Interest Rate "Political"; Minutemen Hear J. C. Brown Recently

"Rural electrification (the REA program) works - I could not defend it if it didn't," J. C. Brown told members of Tri-County Electric Membership Corporation at the cooperative's double-header meeting held in Adamsville last Friday night. It was a called meeting of Tri-County's minutemen, and a meeting of a nominating committee to nominate directors for the coming year.

Elaborating on the success of the rural electric cooperatives, Brown posed the question: "Could it have happened without us?" What he was asking was if rural electrification, as we now know it, would have happened without the electric cooperatives. He said that North Carolina is now 98% electrified and that many people not served by cooperatives owe their electric services the fact that the existence of the cooperatives stimulated other agencies to greater area coverage activity. Brown spoke of the cooperatives' impact on the entire economy. "We have been good for the business on main street," he said, "because for every REA dollar we have borrowed to build lines, the farmers have invested another four dollars of their own in wiring, appliances and equipment."

"The job of rural electrification is still far from complete," said Brown, urging Tri-County members to "defend their success" and declaring, "congress did not set you up to destroy you."

The Eisenhower administration's proposal to hike the REA interest rate above the present 2% was repudiated as a "political" move which would result in the ultimate destruction of the cooperatives. "The Cooperatives are too popular to be destroyed by frontal attack - get 'em by raising the interest rate," was Brown's appraisal of the administration's proposal for changing the REA interest rate.

Herbert Hulse of Goldsboro, attorney for Tri-County E. M. C., likened the minutemen present to the original minutemen in history. Tri-County minutemen are co-op members and other individuals pledged to support the cooperative "against those who seek to destroy the electric cooperatives for selfish purposes." Hulse urged the minutemen to defend themselves informed "so that they may be in a position able to inform others against the combination of a diabolical forces that would destroy the cooperatives in furtherance of their selfish interests."

John Kershaw, general manager of Tri-County E. M. C., remarked on the growth and progress of the cooperative. He commented that system designs made four and five years ago, and considered at the time, to be adequate for seven or eight years have, in some instances, already been outgrown and replaced. He mentioned the fact that the capacity of the substation at Kornegay was recently doubled, and that a complete new station has been put in service this year at LaGrange. Kershaw explained "capital credits" and said that certificates of capital credits have been issued to all members who the co-op owed as much as one cent. He expressed hope that the co-op may soon be in a position able to pay capital credits in cash to deceased members' estates. Capital credits represent margins left over after paying the co-op's expenses each year and are issued on a patronage basis to members.

The nominating committee met following the minutemen meeting and the following persons were nominated for the board of directors, subject to election at the cooperative's annual meeting on November 7: Lewis Outlaw, W. M. Griffin, Cennie Stuckey, Mrs. Vann Smith, Wells Thomas, Fred Outlaw, L. P. Wells, J. A. Davis, Raymond Mitchell, Lealon Keen and Howard Hardy. These men constitute the present board of directors.
